SONG OF THE LITTLE PAINT MAN.

I have a paint pot filled with paint
That's mixed with care and pains
And any floor that I paint over
Will lose its dirt and stains.

The rich and poor, the old and young of Every tribe and nation, Should know that paint put on a floor is Best for its preservation.

CHORUS.

And that is why until I die
I will carry my brush and can
To hide the scars and cover mars
Because I'm the Little Paint Man.

BETTER THAN BATTLESHIPS.

(Toronto Globe)

The story that American tourists had insulted the British flag in Toronto by trailing it in the dust behind a tally-ho on July 4 seems to have spread all over the continent. It has been read by millions who will probably never hear that the British flag was surreptitiously affixed to the axle of the tally-ho by some mischievous Canadian boys. The incident has shown how many warm friends Britain and Canada have across the border, and how truly the better elements in the United States deplore such incidents, whether serious or, as in this case, merely ridiculous. The good-will of men such as the writer of the following note is a better guarantee of another century of peace along the border than many forts or battleships would be.

To the Editor of The Globe:—If the details printed in despatches from Toronto, descriptive of an outrage perpetrated upon the British flag by men claiming to be citizens of the United States, be true, I desire to express to you that what I believe to be the sentiments of every patriotic citizen of this country when I say that any man or men, citizens of this or any other country, who would be guilty of such shameful conduct, not only deserves the severest censure but should be punished to the full extent of the law, and then taken to the border line and kicked across it. Comment on this occurrence has been general in this city, and in every case known to the writer the greatest indignation is expressed, and the only possible excuse offered in extenuation of the offence against public decency is that those responsible for the insult must have been too drunk to know what they were about. The highest commendation is accorded the Magistrate for his leniency in disposing of the case, and the most profound admiration is expressed here for the patient and tolerant utterances of the citizens of Toronto in a case where clubs and guns should have been used instead.

One of the Crowd

I.

"Mr. Wade in?"

Josephs, the mild-looking junior clerk, looked at the big, grey-haired visitor considerably. It had been one of his duties the last few weeks to form some idea whether callers on Hemsley Wade were clients or duns before admitting that Hemsley was in. He decided now that the stranger scarcely had the appearance of a bill-collector or an irate creditor; at the same time, the visitor was a stranger, and might be on trouble bent.

"If you will give me your card, I'll see," he said non-committally.

"I'm Montague Wade, his father," said the elderly visitor, casually.

"Oh, I beg your pardon!" apologized Josephs, at once hurrying to the inner office.

Hemsley Wade came out his room hastily, smiling, both hands extended, to greet his father.

"Why, dad!" he exclaimed, looking thoughtfully into Montague Wade's face. "What's brought you to town? Come into my room! Josephs, I'm out to everybody but Mr. Marvale, and, if he comes, ask him to wait."

Old Wade shook his son's hand abstractedly, and allowed himself to be drawn into the inner office. He looked round the comfortable apartment curiously as he advanced towards the table under the window, and Hemsley shut the door.

"Well, how are you?" inquired Wade the elder, and sat down.

"Oh, I'm all right, thanks!" returned Hemsley hopefully, and took a chair. "Glad to see you looking so well. You were not well when you wrote me last, you'll remember. What's brought you up?"

"Two things, Hemsley," said Mr. Wade, looking at his son fixedly and crossing his legs. "I hear you're on the point of bankruptcy, and that you're practically engaged to a most undesirable young woman."

Hemsley flushed, and his hands clenched under the screening of the table. He drew a hard breath, for his father's tone was a brutally offensive as were his words.

"You have no right to speak in that way of a girl you don't know, sir," he said, as calmly as possible. "As to my financial difficulties—unless you've an inclination to relieve them, I don't see that it will serve any good purpose for us to discuss them. I'm not in the state of mind just now to accept a verbal castigation lying down."

"Don't lose your temper, please," said old Wade. "Remember, I am your father, and that I am deeply concerned in the possibility that our name may be disgraced by bankruptcy or a mesalliance. Are you actually engaged?"

"Yes," answered Hemsley, reseating himself.

"Actually engaged—eh?" muttered old Wade, and moved uncomfortably in his chair. "And does this chorus-girl, or whatever she is, know that you're ruined?"

to know what to do with my money. You understand?"

"Perfectly!" returned his son huskily. "I need never expect another penny from you unless I give up Lettie—which I shall never do."

"Yes, you understand. I leave my offer open for a week. If within that period you care to call upon me for the cheque, on the condition named, you shall have it; if not, I shall take the distasteful step of informing the girl that you're bankrupt, and entirely without expectations, which is another man to the same end—namely, saving you from the toils of a fortune-hunting chorus-girl. I mean it."

"Oh, I don't doubt you mean it!" Hemsley answered bitterly. "But I'm not a penny better or worse off for your bribes or threats."

"Yes, you are, young hot-head. You're better, because you know now, while before you could only have supposed. Which door do I—Oh, this one! Good-bye! A week, Hemsley!"

He opened the door leading to the outer office and went out.

Hemsley threw himself into his chair, and sat inertly, crushed. The last straw had been laid upon his back. He fell into a brown study—or, rather, a dull, fitful attempt to review the situation, and find a glimmer of hope in any circumstance. He scarcely felt any resentment against his father, because he understood him—knew that he was sincere in his prejudice and honest in his determination.

Hemsley knew all along that his engagement to Lettie Somerton would meet his father's most dogged opposition, and, for that reason, he had planned to marry her, and take her off the stage, and introduce her to Montague Wade as what she was by nature—a charming little lady—not as what she had been for a livelihood. In which circumstances, being unprejudiced, his father would accept her—critically, perhaps, scetically, it might even be, but open to conversion. But his financial difficulties had prevented the execution of his plan. And now it was too late. Now he had to choose between Lettie and a fortune of something like £80,000—possibly it might be a great deal more, for his father had always lived a quiet, country life, and the way in which he had spoken of a cheque for £10,000 suggested that it would be a comparatively easy matter to arrange without embarrassing him.

Then he was interrupted in his bewildering thoughts—this time by Josephs, who came in and looked at him with scared eyes, and held out a card.

Hemsley took the card, but his hands trembled so he could not read it.

"Who is it, Josephs?" he asked, blinking.

"A clerk from Andrews, Hinton, & Gutley's," said Josephs compassionately.

Hemsley swung half-round, and dropped into a chair. It had come—the petition—within an hour of his father's visit.

"Show him in, Josephs."

of a crowd"; still a face and figure to be looked at, a voice to be heard; no longer a woman of flesh and blood and mind, to be loved.

At last the curtain rang down, and she was free one more till the following evening. Free! At liberty to experience to the full that dull, strangling sentiment which is loneliness in despair.

For the first time she paused on the dirty pavement outside the stage-door, hesitating which way to turn, instead of hurrying straight home, as usual. The right way home to her lodgings seemed the wrong way anywhere to-night.

"Are you Miss Somerton, may I ask?"

She looked round, and saw in Montague Wade's big face and figure a stranger, who in some indefinable way reminded her of someone she knew.

"Yes," she said stiffly, on her guard instantly, and looked over her shoulder to assure herself that the doorkeeper was at hand.

"I am Montague Wade," he said pointedly. "I should like to speak to you confidentially, if I might."

"I don't think Montague Wade and Lettie Somerton can have any common interest to discuss at this time of night, sir," she retorted, her self-loving kindling her anger at the announcement of his name.

He was obviously surprised by the uncompromising attitude, and irritated, too; but he pressed her to accord him an interview, and, finally, writhing under his persistence, she consented to enter a neighboring cafe, where she had often supped with Hemsley after the play. For form's sake, they ordered coffee.

"I have sought this opportunity to thank you for releasing my son from his engagement, Miss Somerton," said old Wade, in an undertone, with a trace of sarcasm. "I feel it is due to you to admit you've laid me under an obligation. I saw him to-night, and he was quite frank, giving you the entire—the entire credit of cancelling the engagement. Of course, as he explained to you, I presume"—he smiled in the merest pause, and shot a sly look at her hard, white face. She was listening intently, every nerve tense—"you would have married a beggar if you had insisted on marrying him. At the same time, I fancy you may feel you have made a sacrifice in enabling him to conform to his father's wishes, and you would free my mind of self-reproaches, and give me real pleasure, if you would permit me to make you some compensation for your disappointment. I thought—you won't be offended, I hope—but I thought, if I could induce you to accept five hundred pounds, we might all regard the affair as having been brought to a satisfactory conclusion."

"Did your son suggest that?" asked Lettie.

"No," he said hurriedly—"oh, no! No! Certainly not!"

"Thank Heaven for that!" she exclaimed hoarsely, looking almost fiercely at the old man.

"I wished him to think I had cared for him with money, and would not care for him without; but I tried—I tried and prayed he would not think so cruelly, so—so brutally of me as that I did not care for him at all!"

"Oh, be calm, my dear!" said Wade soothingly. "We understand! Of course—"

SEASONABLE RECIPES.

A New Charlotte Russe.—Charlotte russe, with slices of "stirred-in" chocolate cake, instead of the regulation sponge fingers or cake, is delicious and helps out in the search for variety in dessert.

Stuffed Cabbage.—Take one pound of chopped beef, two eggs, pepper and salt to taste. Add butter size of walnut. Mix well together. Cut heart out of large cabbage head, putting meat into the cavity; tie cabbage in cloth and boil several hours. This is a delicious dish for cabbage lovers.

Cabbage a la Cauliflower.—Shave finely one small head of cabbage, cook in boiling salted water until tender. Then stir together one large tablespoonful butter, two spoonfuls of flour, stir into cabbage, with one cupful sweet rich milk. Cook a few minutes and serve.

Lemon Syrup.—Lemons often spoil in warm weather, but if made into a syrup as given below are always ready for lemonade, pies, sauces, etc. Get one dozen lemons and carefully grate the rind, not allowing any of the white part to be used. Squeeze out the juice and add to the grated rind, letting stand several hours. Then take four pounds of sugar and make into a thick syrup with just enough water to boil it smooth. Stir in the lemon juice and bottle in small bottles, dipping the corks in wax. This will keep perfectly, and the wax may be used over and over if saved for this purpose.

Colonial Pudding.—Bring one quart of milk to the boiling point and add half pint molasses, one tablespoonful butter, one level teaspoonful salt, one-half teaspoonful cinnamon mixed with the molasses. Stir three heaping tablespoonfuls cornmeal with a little cold milk and add to other ingredients; scald for a few moments, then turn into buttered baking dish and set in a moderate oven. When it crusts over, stir from the bottom, sprinkle in some large unseeded raisins, pour one pint of cold milk over it and continue baking for two hours; stir again gently in another half hour and add one pint more of milk; bake one hour longer. Thick, plain cream and scraped maple sugar should accompany this dish, both being served separately, or spoon the pudding into a deep, hot dish and cover with spoonfuls of whipped cream, dotting with preserved cherries or raisins plumped in hot water.

Cabinet Pudding.—This is an excellent way to use remains of sponge cake. Butter well a pudding mold holding about three pints. Have ready one and a half cupfuls of fruit—raisins, currants, sliced citron and chopped nuts mixed. Sprinkle the bottom of the mold with the mixed fruit, then put in a layer of stale cake (sponge cake, macaroons or lady-fingers may be used), add another layer of fruit, then of cake, and so continue until the mold is nearly full. Beat three eggs and a third of a cupful of sugar until light, add three cupfuls of hot milk and flavor with vanilla, then pour over the contents of the mold. Steam one

"Yes," answered Hemsley, resisting himself.

"Actually engaged—eh?" muttered old Wade, and moved un-comfortably in his chair. "And does this chorus-girl, or whatever she is, know that you're ruined?"

"No."
"That your father is wealthy?"

"Yes."
Montague Wade laughed slyly.
Hemsley stared at him, his lips twitching.

"Father," he exclaimed, leaning forward suddenly and laying his clenched fists on the table before him, "this is no time for you to come to me in your present frame of mind. I can't stand it. My position is desperate; every moment I'm expecting the bankruptcy petition to come along. For the love you bore me as a child, for the affection you have borne me as a man, don't soothen at the one thing that makes my position endurable—Lettie."

"I'm afraid you'll find that 'Lettie' will make your position worse when she knows what your position is," answered old Wade wisely.
"If she don't chuck you, it'll be because she knows I'm your father, and you're my only son."

"Cut it, sir—cut it!" cried Hemsley angrily, leaping to his feet. "For what reason have you come here, if you've nothing better, wiser, kinder to say?"

"The purpose for which I've come here, my son, is, as I've told you, a duplex purpose, and I thought I might kill two birds with one stone," old Wade responded blandly. "I've not come to quarrel, though I'll confess to being predisposed by a deep sense of irritation. I want to see if we can't apply a practical remedy for your complication of diseases. As far as I understand things, this business was doing very well until you got involved by experiments with that torpedo; that crippled you, eh? You've starved your legitimate business, I assume, to experiment with a foreign matter. Therefore, if you could pay off your liabilities, there's no reason why you shouldn't continue the business, and earn a good income. I'll give you a cheque to meet all debts up to ten thousand pounds, on one consideration—"

"If that is a fatherly offer, made in a spirit of fatherly generosity, I accept most gratefully," said Hems-ley deliberately; "but if it is an offer for my promise to give up Lettie, I decline it absolutely."

Old Wade rose, put on his hat, and began to button his jacket.

"I think that is all I had to do in town," he muttered consideringly, and held out his hand.

Hemsley grasped it quickly, and got on his feet.

"Father," he exclaimed eagerly,
"don't be prejudiced! You haven't seen her; you don't know—"

"I have seen her, I think. I was at the Kemble Theatre last night, and she was pointed out to me."

"And doesn't your knowledge of character enable you to judge that she's a good girl?"

"My knowledge of worldly affairs enables me to judge that Montague Wade's cheque for ten thousand is a good cheque," answered old Wade coolly. "You're—thirty-three, old enough to know what sort of girl, woman, or what you most fancy for a wife, and I'm not disposed to discuss your judgment.
At the same time, I'm old enough

II.
Lettie was very white, and her pretty eyes, which were generally so tender and thoughtful, were bright and restless with excitement.
She leant back against the head of the shabby sofa, her fingers dug deeply into its padding.

Hemsley watched her eagerly, hungry for her answer. The pause seemed interminable.

"I'm very fond of you," she said at length, speaking with evident effort; "but not enough to enjoy poverty with you, Hemsley. And it would not be fair to expect you —to allow you to refuse your father's offer, and quarrel with him, for my sake. Love is sweet, but money is necessary."

While she spoke, anger and reproach welled into his eyes.

"That is your decision—your answer?" he asked hoarsely, after struggling painfully for his breath.
She nodded gravely, avoiding his fixed gaze. "You chuck me!" he added bitterly, with scorn. "He said you would! I shall not plead with you!"

She looked at him out of the tail of her eye, and winced.

"Of course he did. It was his policy to tar you with the brush of his own prejudice; but he didn't know. I might have held you to the engagement," she returned;
"but I don't. You can go to him and tell him that you have broken with me."

"But I have not! You have jilted me!" he exclaimed hotly.

"We won't argue about that," she responded coldly, and moved from the head of the sofa and sat down.

"You're perfectly justified, of course," he said, turning to her and speaking rapidly, "and I'm bound in honor to release you, without plea or protest. I courted you as a man of comfortable means, with large expectations. You're perfectly justified. I shall see my father to-night, and sell my pledge for his draft."

"I will return your letters," he added, and went towards the door.

"Thank you!"

"Good-bye!"

"Good-bye!" she echoed. She heard him speak to her landlady, whom she met in the passage, and go not, shutting the street door after him quietly. "Good-bye!"
she repeated.

She had a rehearsal that afternoon of a musical comedy for a provincial tour, and she was glad of it—glad to have to work—arduous work—to take her thoughts from her disappointment. Though it scarcely did that; but it blurred the figures of her imagination, and inspired her with some hope of the future, for in the tour she was to have a speaking part.

Her salary would be the same as she received as a chorus-girl in town, but her status in the profession would be improved. It was the second rung of the ladder, and in her mind's eye she worked up the possibilities lost. And after the rehearsal she had to attend at the Kemble Theatre, to sing and look pretty.

She threw her whole soul into the matter, and succeeded. But while she sang, her fancy pictured Hems-ley, and an indefinite form, which represented his father, sitting over their after-dinner wine, and her voice almost broke. She was still a chorus-girl, with the heartrending struggles before her; still "one care for him without; but I tried—I tried and prayed he would not think so cruelly, so—so brutally of me as that I did not care for him at all!"

"Oh, be calm, my dear!" said Wade soothingly. "We understand! Of course—"

"You understand—you understand!" she said, panting with anger and contempt. "You think you understand why I did it, and you offer me money!" She leant forward towards him, her anger flashing from her tear-filled eyes, and beat softly on the edge of the table uncontrollable passion. "I did it because I loved him, just as I would have worked for him and starved for him because I love him!
And you offer me money!"

She leapt to her feet, and, before he could recover his presence of mind, brushed past him, and swept out into the street.

He rose quickly as she disappeared, and, throwing half-a-crown down upon the table, rushed out of the cafe after her.

"Hi!" he shouted, catching sight of her swiftly-moving figure twenty yards down the street, and, in his amazement, forgetting himself, and oblivious to the attention he was attracting. "Hi!"

A quick-witted policeman, whom Lettie had flounced past, scenting a case of pickpocket, or something akin, promptly gave chase to the unbreeding girl. In a few seconds he had caught her by the arm, swung her round, and was walking her back to meet Montague Wade.

At sight of her in custody the old man hurried forward.

"Touch her, if you dare! Don't touch her!" he stormed. "What the—"

"Ain't you lost nothing?" demanded the surprised constable.

"No!" snapped Montague. And, taking her hand quietly, he drew her away from the little knot of people who had gathered round.
"Come along, my dear!" he said briskly. "It was my fault—entirely my fault! I lost myself!"

"It's all right now!" he continued soothingly, yet quickly. "It's all right now! We understand now!
I was an old fool, my dear; but how should I know it was like that! Women are so beguiling, and young men are so easily beguiled! I love my boy, and I was afraid for him! I'm a bit old-fashioned, perhaps. But it's all right now, my dear; though I shall insist on your leaving the stage.
You'll do that, to please me, won't you? And it'll please Hemsley, too. I know you'll do that, for you love him, as much as I do. My dear, you melted me! Let's look for a cab! I'll drive you home!
We can't get hold of Hemsley and let him know to-night, but I'll try —as soon as I've seen you home, I'll try! Where do you live? Hi, cabby! Cab—hi!"

She got into the hansom with childlike obedience, dazed by her wonderment, bewildered by his volubility; but as he threw himself on the seat beside her, and, taking her hand, patted it soothingly, tears gushed from her eyes.

"I feel for the moment that I love you better than Hemsley!"
she said hysterically.

"Pooh! Nonsense!" he exclam-ed; but he was immensely pleased, nevertheless.—London Answers.

Beat three eggs and a third of a cupful of sugar until light, add three cupfuls of hot milk and flavor contents of the mold. Steam one a cupful of sugar and a third of a cupful of water to rather a thick syrup, add a third of a cupful of beaten currant jelly, and when the jelly is dissolved, add the juice of a lemon and rub through a

Brunswick Stew.—This famous stew was originally made with squirrel meat in place of chicken, but as squirrels were not always at hand, and chicken usually is, the latter is most generally used.
Have ready a large, fat fowl cut into convenient sized pieces, six good sized potatoes, one pint of lima beans, three ears of corn, four medium sized onions and half a pound of salt pork. Choose a broad buttoned kettle and place half of the pork, chopped over the bottom, then a layer of potatoes which have been sliced thin and parboiled, then a layer of ham beans, next of corn cut from the cob, then lastly a layer of chicken.
Repeat, using up all the vegetables.
Add three quarts of boiling water, cover tightly and allow to stew slowly for three hours. Then add six large, sliced, ripe tomatoes, one level tablespoonful of sugar, one of salt, and a good pinch of pepper.
Cook slowly for another hour, adding more water if needed. Then rub two spoonfuls flour with four of butter. Stir in, let boil up and serve.

ASPARAGUS.

Steamed Asparagus.—Lay the asparagus in a steamer after having washed thoroughly. Do not cut. Steam about three-quarters of an hour. When done lay in rows on a hot platter and cover with butter sauce.

Creamed Asparagus.—Asparagus to be good should be purchased a day ahead and stood on end in a couple of inches of cold water and kept cool. First cut off an inch of the dried end. When ready to cook cut off the tops and put into cold water. Peel the lower part of stalk up to tender portion, cut into inch pieces, boil for ten minutes in salted water to which a pinch of soda has been added. Then put in the tips and cook till tender. Serve with cream dressing or drawn butter.

Asparagus Mold.—Cut one bunch of asparagus in pieces and cook.
Boil one bunch in whole stalks.
Make a sauce of one tablespoon flour and two of butter; add one cup of milk and two eggs beaten thoroughly. Mix the cooked pieces of asparagus in this and pour in a small cake pan with hole in center
(the kind used for angel food).
When set remove from oven and place whole asparagus stalks in center.

Lemon Ginger Punch.—Make a strong lemonade of five lemons, one cupful of sugar, three pints of water. To each pint allow one pint of ginger ale. Mix in a big punch bowl with a piece of ice. Take a number of springs of mint. Bruise stems and leaves between the fingers. Half an hour before serving place mint in punch bowl.

USEFUL HINTS.

Never throw away pea pods, they give a delicious flavor to the puree for the next day.

Now that the refrigerator is in use, wash it every week with soda water and keep a saucer of charcoal in it.

It is much easier to skin onions if they are covered with boiling water for a few moments before peeling.

White canvas shoes, if not too badly soiled, can be cleaned with flour and the heels whitened with chalk.

When making lemonade or orangeade, peel the fruit and run through a meat chopper. Less trouble and more juice.

In replacing house plants, place first dirt in pan and put in hot oven for a few minutes. It will destroy all worms and slugs.

A roast of meat which is to be served cold should be wrapped in a cloth when it is put away. It keeps it flavor better.

To remove grease, mix equal parts of ether, ammonia and alcohol, rub into grease spot, and allow it to evaporate. Apply with sponge.

Much time is saved if paper linings for cake pans are cut in quantities and kept ready for instant use in a dust-proof box with tight lid.

After scrubbing potatoes to bake, grease them with lard, and the outer skin will come off like burnt paper when the potatoes are served.

To make a good washing fluid, mix one box of lye, one and one-half gallons water, one ounce liquid ammonia, one tablespoonful of salts of tartar.

Coffee pots and tea pots in which borax water is boiled two or three times a week are purified and entirely freed from musty taste or odor.

A little muriatic acid added to the rinsing water after a blue and white fibre rug is scrubbed with soap and water will help to restore the color.

It is said that a reliable way to set colors in cotton goods is to soak them in turpentine and water, a tablespoonful of turpentine to a gallon of water.

A clean cloth dipped in hot water, then a saucer of bran, will speedily clean white paint without injury to it. The soft bran acts like soap on the dirt.

If the pans in which milk custards and salad dressings are to be boiled are first wiped out with a cloth greased with lard, they will neither stick nor scorch.

THE PRICE WAS TOO GREAT

The Rich Man's Difficulty Before Jesus Is Here Discussed.

Jesus said unto him, go sell whatever thou hast and give to the poor; and come, take up the cross and follow me.—Mark x. 21.

Here, we have a drama that almost merges into a tragedy. It is full of power; it quivers with intensest interest.

Two young men face each other. The distinguishing quality in one is the bearing of a cultured, well-bred gentleman. The distinguished quality of the other is the strength and dignity and beauty of the soul that shines in every feature of his face. In the face of the one is a great expectancy; in that of the other is the strong reserve power that invites the cry of human need. The one is a pupil, the other is the Master.

Jesus took his hand and, lifting him up to that level where man looks into the eyes of man, said: "Put away, sell those things that are between you and your fellow man and take the same pathway I am taking; then you will truly realize the vision that has come to your soul."

These words created conviction, for they voiced the message of his own soul. He felt that was the door through which he must pass and that on the other side would be

NEW JOY AND POWER.

But the price was too great. In a silence as of the grave he turned sadly toward home.

This is no condemnation of riches. There is no moral quality in mere money. Our saying that money is the root of all evil is only partly true. It is true in so far as money awakens the worst forms of selfishness in us; it touches springs and sources of soul poison as nothing else does. If there is anything else that will touch a deeper depth and awaken a worse form of selfishness, then that is the root of all evil. Jesus enunciated a great principle and did not tie up mankind to a narrow rule.

Life must have a vision, an ideal.

A vision is an outline of possibility. "To live," to "truly live," is to bring every energy, every activity, every thought to bear upon the filling in of that outline. It is to see a "gleam" and follow it. To see that vision is to see the purpose of God. To set out to realize it is to feel the presence of God in the life. This gives true bigness to the soul and to the life. The man who is too big to consider small things is also too small to consider big things. We must have telescopic men and men with telescopic minds. Too many are microscopic men—intense upon little things without seeing their interrelationship or their relationship to a center. In religion the order must never be inverted—it is vision, that we may see how the parts relate to the whole; outlook, that we may helpfully and truly get inlook.

WEALTH NEEDS VISION.

and this Jesus gave this young man.

Vision finally changed him. Tradition says the young man followed Jesus later. This is easy to believe, for no true soul can ever get away from its vision or from the love that awakened it. Both were here. Every beggar he met, every struggling workman he employed, every ill-clad, ill-fed child he saw, every tired-looking mother and every form of sorrow or suffering would daily awaken his vision anew. It would be with him as he rested on his own luxurious couch, as he sat at his own richly laden table, as he put on his own comfortable garments, as he balanced his weekly accounts—the vision would pour in its light and suggestions on these. And so this vision, this love of Jesus, would follow and appeal and plead until the heart and life became shot through with the Christ spirit, selfishness was driven out, his soul set free to follow the gleam, and the true joy of ennobled manhood became the young man's possession.

REV. DR. JOHN R. MACKAY.

RIGHT IDEAL WANTED.

In its struggle to get dairy farmers to do more perfect work, keep better cows, build more healthful stables, take better care of their soil, use more intelligence in feeding and handling the herd, Hoard's Dairyman has held up the ideal, and it is a true one, that unless farmers work toward this end they will miss the best profit on their labor and investment.

But it is hard to get men who have never really thought out this problem, to see it, and to see now, house all the tools of the farm should be found easily without inquiry of every member of the family as to where was the saw left or the hammer, the plane or the axe.

As soon as fermentation begins in manure some of its substance is given off in gas, but if this fermentation goes on in the soil it will be slow and the products of the decay can be used by crops, not to speak of the advantage to the soil from the fermentation which decomposes the inert nitrogen compounds in the humus and disintegrates other insoluble matters. After all, then, it may be better practice to turn under manure while fresh than to wait for the "well-rotted" manure so generally praised.

TIGER ATTACKS SURVEYORS.

Wounded Several and Badly Frightened All.

An interesting report is given by an officer in charge of a survey party in the Lushai Hills, adjoining the Cachar district of Assam, dealing with a series of ferocious attacks by a tiger on two of his surveyors, says the Surveyor of India Notes.

The tiger made his first appearance on February 18 at the camp of Surveyor Gopal Singh, when it is said to have sprung upon the surveyor and one of his khalasis, who were seated alongside of each other while the evening meal was being cooked. For some reason not known the tiger did not touch either of the men and disappeared as suddenly as it had come, but the men were so alarmed that after spending a sleepless night they moved their camp to that of Surveyor Amar Singh, about four miles off. On February 21, however, the same tiger, presumably, attacked the camp again, seizing a khalasi who was washing his cooking pots in a stream not twenty yards from the camp.

One of the tindals, by name Nandu, armed with only a stick, very pluckily rushed at the tiger and tried to beat it off the unfortunate khalasi, but it was not until the rest of the two squads came up that the tiger dropped his prey and disappeared, only to return a few minutes later and in spite of the frantic shouting of the men seized Nandu by the arm. It was again driven off, but again returned, and seized a third khalasi. Its third attempt to provide itself with a meal was frustrated in the same way as the others had been, and, fortunately, it only succeeded in inflicting slight injuries. The whole party then spent the rest of the night surrounded by fires and keeping up a continuous hullabaloo.

At daybreak they moved off to a Lushai village carrying two of the wounded men and their maps, but leaving their tents and everything else behind them. On their way they were met by the camp officer, L. Williams, who had somehow received news of the desperate straits the men were in and had hurried off to their assistance. He did what he could for the injured men, but one of them was in such a woeful condition that he died almost immediately. They were all sent into Silchar, however, and a band of armed Lushai was despatched to the abandoned camp to collect and bring away all the kit that had been left there. They found the tents, bedding and blankets and bags of rice torn and dragged about and a sight rule and plane table stand bearing marks of fangs. Probably they had been utilized in beating it off.

When Mr. Williams met the party all the men were so profoundly affected that not one of them could speak above a whisper and begged not to be sent back to the same locality, but to be allowed to work for the rest of the field season in open cultivated country, which they have been permitted to do.

BUSINESS SITE IN CHINA.

Superstitions That Control Its Selection.

The Chinese are invariably courteous and considerate if you take them the right way. Superstition of course is deeply engrafted in their natures, and a kind of Kismet policy, after the manner of the Turks, takes possession of them, so that whatever is going to happen will happen and there the matter ends, says the Shanghai Mercury.

Battling against fate for a Chinaman is sheer waste of time, and he simply bows his head to the inevitable. Take for example the strict attention or rather the devotion that is paid to "feng-shui" on the Yangtze. Feng-shui is the superstition that determines good site or locality, and if a town on the Yangtze has not a good feng-shui trade will not come to it and it will be ruined.

A town named Pei-Shih had its pagoda in the wrong place, not far enough down the river in fact, the result being that all traffic which should have come to it was swept past, the result being that Pei-Shih was left out in the cold. All the talk in the world would not convince the Pei-Shih folk that the depression could arise from any other cause than that of a bad feng-shui, so they pulled the pagoda down and built another one in the supposed right spot. So far prosperity has not returned to Pei-Shih, though the inhabitants live in hope.

The city of Wanshien, on the other hand, has a perfect feng-shui, two fine pagodas, one a thousand feet high, below the town while Wanshien itself is very prosperous. The fact that Wanshien is situated in a most fertile valley where wheat, barley and the poppy flourish abundantly, while Pei-Shih is barren and miserable, does not concern the inhabitants of these places so much as the feng-shui site. This absurd idea in the Chinese mind is only one of thousands like it.

FAIR EXCHANGE.

"You are in the employ of that millionaire up on the hill, aren't you?" snapped the sharp-faced woman who ran the butter-and-egg shop.

"Yes, ma'am," responded the man in the white apron, "and I want two pounds of butter for my master's table. He said he'd send to town after it, only the roads are so bad."

"He did, eh? Well, we are not particular about his trade. Did you tell him I said his money was tainted?"

"Indeed I did."
"And what did he say?"
"Said so was your blamed old butter."

farmers work toward this end they will miss the best profit on their labor and investment.

But it is hard to get men who have never really thought out this problem, to see it, and to see now, with their present standard or ideal, they are forcing themselves all the time to take lowest financial reward and many times absolute loss.

Lack of thinking, lack of study and reading, in reality, lack of sound farming intelligence, lies at the bottom of poor farming every where. That is the bottom reason why so many men report that a steady reading of good papers brings better results and more revenue to them. A man must have a mighty dull mind that would not improve under a year's stimulus this kind. But a vast majority of farmers fail to see just where the trouble lies.

They lack a true, clear ideal in the mind of good dairy farming. Just as long as a farmer has a low ideal of dairy cows he will remain content with poor cows. Put a different idea of cows into his mind, and he starts at once to keep a different grade of cows; and so it runs up, every step of the ladder. But the best ladder in the world will not lift a man up so he can see farther and better as long as it lies flat on the ground. A Pennsylvania farmer writes us this little message:

"Reading the Dairyman has made a great change in me in ten years. I've learned more and done better, made more money in the ten years I have been reading it than in the previous twenty-five years that I kept cows. But what beats me is that I have got neighbors who are so blind that they can't see this. I try to tell them how it has worked with me, then their minds shut up like a clam shell and they won't listen. I sometimes wonder how I got out of that crowd myself."

He tells farther of how his neighbors sneered, and "bully ragged" him when he bought a pure bred dairy bull; how they had opposed every step he took for improvement, and yet he says, they will quickly pay ten dollars more for a cow that was sired by that old bull of mine." He further speaks of the "hindering influence" farmers exert over one another in preventing a rapid and profitable improvement in good farming and he wonders, "why it is?" Our answer would be, that such men have no clear cut ideal of good farming in their minds. When a neighbour tries to break out, may be they are afraid he will do better than they are doing and so they try to hold him.

If we do our best in this world we must have a "mind of our own." We must feed that mind with good, sound ideas, whether our neighbors like it or not. A farmer without right ideas of farming is bound to be a "poor stick" and there is no help for it.

THE HUMAN MACHINE.

Viennese Medical Scientist Says It Has Bad Days.

Just as a watch on certain days is in bad working order, for no accountable reason; so the human body has its bad days at fairly regular intervals.

The above remarkable theory is contained in a newly-published scientific work, The Critical Days of Men, by the well known Viennese specialist, Dr. Hermann Swobada.

These "bad" days, he says are entirely independent of any mistakes in diet or mode of life. They occur without any external cause, and the troubles may be headaches, heart trouble, indigestion, nervous excitability, or lassitude.

Dr. Swobada states that the critical conditions recur usually every twenty-three, or sometimes twenty-eight days, while the results of over-exercise or excess, if they do not appear at once, often come up exactly forty-six or sixty-nine days afterwards.

This theory also applies to mental phenomena, grief for the loss of a relative being serious for twenty-three days, and then suddenly passing away.

Lastly, according to Dr. Swobada, men succumb on a critical day—when the machinery of the body is in bad working order.

A well known surgeon, who is connected with a large London hospital, says:

"I have been keenly interested in this subject for some time," he said. "Dr. Swobada's theory is in my opinion, of great importance to medical science. It must be generally admitted that men have certain days when they feel unaccountably depressed and ill through some unknown cause."

"It is my view that these bad days are often caused through the weather, particularly when there is a change from a cold to a warm temperature. 'Bad' days are most prevalent in spring and autumn."

"At such times the nervous system is more easily disturbed and the sufferer is far more liable to catch disease than at ordinary times."

"On 'bad' days one is also mentally disturbed. 'Out of balance' crimes are committed on such days—particularly when they occur in the spring and autumn."

"Every man knows from the moment of waking when he is in for a bad day. What should he do? It may sound impracticable, but my advice is as follows:

"He should go out into the country by himself, and, if it is summer, lie in a field and think of nothing but cows. He should also avoid eating meat."

THE SIZE OF THE FEAST.

The magnitude of the banquet which the British newspaper men tendered the visiting delegates from the overseas dominions on June 5, is indicated by the following figures: For the banquet there were provided 400 fowl, 200 duck, 30 turtles, 300 pounds of salmon, 500 bottles champagne, and 2,000 cigars. Forty chefs prepared the food, and 300 waiters served it, using 10,000 plates and dishes, and 20 tons of china, glass, linen and silver.

TO FIGHT WHITE PLAGUE

STERN MEASURES WILL BE ADOPTED IN ENGLAND.

Will Strike at One of the Sources by the Slaughter of Infected Milch Cows.

Within less than a generation tuberculosis—that terrible scourge which claims more victims every year than a whole European war—will be a thing of the past in England. The government has taken up a campaign against it which promises to make it before long almost as rare as smallpox or typhus fever, writes a London correspondent.

The English Saint George who has sallied forth to slay this modern dragon is Hon. John Burns, the former dock laborer who is now a cabinet minister and a friend of the King. He is seeking fresh legislation, but he is not waiting for that. He has just foreshadowed a policy by which he proposes with the weapons ready to his hand to remove the most dangerous sources of infection—the pauper consumptive—from the possibility of being a source of contagion to his family and neighbors. Public opinion is not ripe yet in England for the compulsory isolation of consumptives in the way that persons who are stricken with smallpox are now dealt with, although medical opinion is practically unanimous that such treatment is necessary before the disease can be wholly eradicated, but John Burns, the practical man, has devised a means by which this end can be achieved without outraging that false, but strong sentiment which regards isolation as an invasion of the liberty of the individual. He is now preparing to put in practice, by a rule by which 90 per cent. of the poor consumptives of the country will be compelled to enter the public infirmaries, where, of course, they will be effectively isolated, will have every possible chance of recovery, and will no longer be a danger to their fellows.

Burns's plan is based on the fact that 90 per cent. of the poor consumptives in England, at one stage or another of their disease, are compelled to seek what is known as out relief from the poor law authorities. Out relief consists of a weekly dole of money from the public funds which is given to persons who are not absolutely destitute and who are desirous of keeping out of the workhouse. It is good in most cases because it enabled many a family to tide over bad times without the radical breaking up which must always result from selling up the few sticks of furniture they possess and entering the poorhouse. It also saves many deserving persons from the workhouse stigma.

But in the case of consumptives it enables the patient to make himself a center of infection. Burns's first step, therefore, has been to issue an order as president of the local government board, making tuberculosis a notifiable disease. This means that every medical man who comes across a case of consumption in his practice must notify the name and address and certain other particulars concerning

BABIES FLUNG INTO FIRE.

Tales of Terrible Suffering From Cilicia.

Correspondents of the Bible Lands Mission Aid Society have been sending in tales of the horrors in Cilicia during the recent massacres.

One of the women from Kozolook, an Armenian village to the north of Tarsus, gives the following account of her terrible experience at the hands of the Turks:—

"There were forty-seven of us, men, women and children, who were taken by the mob as if to go to one of their villages; other groups were driven in other directions. They marched us for hours on the mountains, with one pretext or another, till they brought us to a level place not far from the Tarsus road. Here they debated whether they should kill us. For a long time they threatened, and we besought them with tears and crying to spare us. They then said they must send to Tarsus for instructions; we gave money to one of them who was to go as messenger, what word he brought back, or whether he returned at all, I do not know. They at last told us they were going to kill us.

"We were at the edge of a field of wheat; they took us away into some bushes not far from a terebinth tree, for they said the fire would hurt the wheat. They ordered us to lie down on the ground in a row, with our heads to the west. We begged them to shoot us through the heart or the head, but they said they did not want to waste powder and ball on swine like us; they would do the thing more cheaply. There was a great crowd of them. Four or five went at each of us with swords and daggers, hacking our heads and breasts. I cannot get the shrieks out of my ears. I was badly wounded, but not killed.

"They had made a great fire of dry bushes and now they threw us all dead and wounded, into it. My three little children had not been killed; the men took my oldest and my youngest, a mere babe, and flung them into the flames, where they perished. I had my second child in my arms and we were thrown into the fire together. I at once scrambled out, though badly burned, with the little one. I ran a short distance, and sat down, dazed and weeping. A Turk had pity on me and led me away, and a last sent me here. My husband and thirty other members of our large family were killed."

Even the police about the town are hardly recognizable, for, instead of the evil-look-

SPECS A CURE FOR CRIME

THEORY OF DR. WILLIAM M. RICHARDS OF NEW YORK.

Has Put Glasses on Hundreds of Offenders With Good Results.

Cain did not wear glasses. If he had he might not have killed Abel. A number of other catastrophes might have been averted by the timely application of a pair of spectacles. If you want to reform a criminal clap a pair of glasses on him, for the chances are that defective physical vision has impaired his moral views. Such is the theory of Dr. William M. Richards of New York, and he hopes inside of a year to be able to back his theory with statistics.

POOR EYESIGHT LEADS TO CRIME.

In compiling his statistics and in the search for subjects Dr. Richards has visited several police courts, the Elmira Reformatory, the Magdalen Home and various other institutions. At the Elmira Reformatory he found that most of the boys were suffering from abnormal vision, that in the majority of cases poor eyesight had led to truancy, truancy to bad companionship and that to crime.

SPECTACLED MORALITY.

At the Magdalen Home he fitted glasses to twenty inmates, and everyone of these, he said, found work on getting out and kept it. One girl in particular had never been able to keep a job more than a few days. She was considered stupid and lazy. Since leaving the home two months ago wearing a pair of glasses she has been steadily employed by a firm of wholesalers, and is still working there. At the time he examined her she was unable to make out the largest type on the test card at a distance of four feet.

Dr. Richards is now trying his scheme on some 200 second offenders, burglars, hold-up men and grafters of various degrees, and he hopes that if they do not lose their glasses they will be desirable citizens by the time they emerge from seclusion.

FORTUNE FROM SANDWICHES.

Ham, Corned Beef, Cheese, Sardine, Beef and Tongue.

There has just died at the age of sixty-seven a man of the name of Angelo Basso, of New York, who amassed a fortune amounting to $500,000 by selling sandwiches. Basso was credited with giving the "best, biggest, and most appetizing" sandwich in town for the modest sum of a nickel (five cents). Everyone knew Basso's sandwiches, and though he had only one shop it was crowded sixteen hours out of the twenty-four by messenger boys, work-girls, business men, and others who had come a considerable distance to secure what became known as a "Basso."

of his circumstances will be made. If it is found that he is able to have a separate room at home and observe certain other sanitary precautions out relief will be granted, but if this is not so—and there are very few cases where the observance of these conditions will be possible—the grant of relief will be refused. The immediate result will be that the poor consumptive will be compelled to seek admission to the workhouse and once there he will be removed to an up-to-date sanatorium where he will receive the best possible treatment. In this eminently practical way has John Burns solved the problem of overcoming a public prejudice which is dangerous to the public health.

No public announcement of this plan has been made and as a matter of fact no public announcement is intended. It is not desired that there shall be a public discussion of the new policy in England, because there are sure to be a number of people who will denounce it as an example of the growth in this country of continental bureaucracy. The nearest that Burns has come to making public what he intends to do, was announcement that he made a few days ago in a speech at the opening of the tuberculosis exhibition in the east end of London.

"I trust," he said, "to follow up the notification of tuberculosis order by a circular to poor law authorities, on the conditions under which poor law relief should be given to outdoor consumptive paupers, suggesting methods of self-treatment, removal perhaps, to another place.

ADVICE AND GUIDANCE.

and extended help in the direction of cure and prevention."

In the field of legislation also Burns is active in the fight against the white plague. He has just introduced in Parliament a bill to safeguard and purify the milk supply of the country. German and American researches have proved beyond doubt that one of the chief sources of tuberculosis in children is milk from diseased cows, and it has been ascertained that nearly a third of the milk cows in England are suffering from tuberculosis in one form or another. Burns's bill provides for the slaughter of these diseased cows and the payment of compensation to the farmers on a scale graded in proportion to the degree to which the disease has advanced. Thus a badly diseased cow will not be paid for at all, but in the case of one in which the disease is only in its early stages the farmer will receive nearly her full value. Heavy penalties are provided for farmers and dealers who sell milk from cows suffering from tuberculosis unless it is efficiently sterilized, or, better still, pasteurized. The bill has the approval of all parties in the House of Commons and the only thing been cleared of a host of beggars, tramps, burglars, and assassins, which had hitherto made the capital their home. Arson has ceased and the streets are safe. Even the police about the town are hardly recognizable, for, instead of the evil-looking, dirty man of recent times, one meets to-day a neatly-dressed official, who knows his duty and is respected by all.

Even carriage drivers are feeling the change. Horses unfit for work may no longer be used, and the cabmen now find that they must feed their animals sufficiently if they want permission to ply for hire. In the agricultural provinces the roads and bridges are having attention. The mutinied First Army Corps is being usefully employed, unarmed, in reconstructing the roads about Monastir and Salonica, a special credit of nearly $400,000 having been added to the budget for this purpose. The Ministry of Public Works has also in hand the preparation of an elaborate scheme for roads and railways throughout the country. Electric lighting and necessary railway lines will soon be put in hand, giving work to the many unemployed, and encouraging the return of capital to the impoverished empire.

UNPOPULAR PROCLAMATIONS.

In China No One Obeys Them and They Are Not Enforced.

A proclamation issued by the Viceroy of the province that all opium dens in Wanshien must close has gone unheeded, as most things appear to do in China when it does not suit the populace, says the Shanghai Mercury.

Wanshien is a city of 120,000 inhabitants and is surrounded by poppy fields, nine-tenths of the community indulging in the drug, while the city itself contains innumerable shops for retailing it.

When the appointed time came for closing up, all the shops "did themselves proud." Bright new lanterns gleamed from the portals, while clean curtains decorated the interior and trade was as brisk as ever. In other words the opium venders were "saving face," a peculiar characteristic of the Chinese, and not even a policeman, if there is such a thing in Wanshien, enforced the order.

Opium smoking continues at Wanshien in the same old way and the crop to be reaped this year is a third bigger than last. What can a Viceroy do when the people, to a man, won't listen, especially when the people know that the proclamation may be only a matter of form.

GAS-ENGINES FOR SHIPS.

The report that an English battleship of 18,000 horse-power is to be driven by gas-engines without funnels was said by Sir William White recently to be based on an exaggerated idea of what is at present possible in the development of such engines. Yet progress is being made, and on a dozen English battleships gas-engines are now in use for auxiliary purposes. It is believed that for small vessels such engines may soon come to be largely employed. They save weight and space, and Lord Graham has expressed the opinion that there would be no difficulty in installing them in ships up to 3,000 horse-power.

KILLED TENT-PEGGING.

British Gunner Impaled on His Own Lance.

Corporal Newman, a gunner of the Royal Field Artillery, met his death in a remarkable manner recently while practising tent-pegging near London.

He missed the peg, and was swinging the lance over his head, when it flew from his grasp. The butt end embedded itself in the ground in front of the galloping horse, and, the point falling towards the rider, he was impaled on his own weapon. Both lungs were pierced, the lance going completely through the body.

Newman fell from his horse, pulled out the weapon, and died in a comrade's arms.

At the inquest it was stated that there was no record of such an accident having happened before.

THE CZAR'S CARPET.

Stolen While One Thousand Policemen Looked on.

An audacious robbery was committed under the very noses of a thousand policemen in the streets of St. Petersburg recently.

On the occasion of the inauguration of the Czar of the monument to Alexander III. the streets and squares were laid down with costly carpets.

Immediately after the ceremony, while 1,000 policemen were still on the scene, a gang of unknown thieves, dressed as workmen, came up with twenty carts, removed 4,000 yards of carpet belonging to the Czar and to the municipality, and disappeared without let or hindrance.

MOUNT EREBUS.

One of the most interesting achievements of Lieutenant Shackleton's south polar expedition was the ascent of Mount Erebus, the most southerly of all known volcanoes, by a party led by Professor David. The highest peak has an elevation of 13,120 feet. An old crater, filled with feldspar crystals, pumice and sulphur, was found at the height of 11,000 feet. The active crater at the summit is half a mile in diameter, and 800 feet deep. It was ejecting steam and sulphurous gases to a height of 2,000 feet when the party visited it. The ascent was made in March, 1903; in June the volcano was very active, and photographs of the eruption were made by moonlight. The neighboring volcano, Mount Terror, was inactive.

Years ago, among the many attractions held at the Madison Square Garden was a six-days' walking race. This race went on hour after hour from midnight Saturday to midnight Friday, many people staying there. The entire week. On such occasions as these the Angelo Basso sandwich, which the wise old Italian put on sale there, came to be looked upon as a standard article. No one wanted any sandwich but Basso's, and it was quite useless for anyone else to try and break into the old man's trade; it was an impossibility which was recognized. One Basso sandwich was a meal for an ordinary man, and two would satisfy six children. These sandwiches were made of good material and very varied—ham, corned beef, cheese, sardine, beef, tongue, etc.—and it was Basso's boast that never during the forty years he had been making sandwiches had he been accused of selling even a "questionable" one.

Although the profit of these sandwiches was very small—considering their size—Basso waxed rich, and was soon able to take a fine delicatessen store in a popular part of New York. But though he sold other things—pickles, tongues, olives, sauerkraut, and, in fact, every kind of "table delicacy"—he never ignored the humble sandwich, but kept up the standard throughout his life, and when he died he left a fortune of half a million dollars, three-quarters of which he had made selling good sandwiches at a small profit.

HIS GREATEST TREASURE.

"A certain shepherd boy was keeping his sheep in a flowery meadow, and because his heart was happy, he sang so loudly that the surrounding hills echoed back his song. One morning the king, who was out hunting, spoke to him and said: 'Why are you so happy, my boy?'"

"Why should I not be happy?" he answered the boy. "Our king is not richer than I."

"Indeed," said the king, "pray tell me of your great possessions."

The shepherd boy answered: "The sun in the bright blue sky shines as brightly upon me as upon the king. The flowers upon the mountain and the grass in the valley grow and bloom to gladden my sight as well as his. I would not take a hundred thousand dollars for my hands; my eyes are of more value than all the precious stones in the world. I have food and clothing, too. Am I not, therefore, as rich as the king?"

CLOTHES OF FISH SKINS.

The skin of a fish does not suggest itself as a suitable material for the making of clothes, yet it is used for this purpose by a tribe of Tartars in Manchuria. They inhabit the banks of the Peon River, and live by fishing and hunting. During the last hundred years they have become nearly extinct owing to the invasion of their domain by agricultural Chinese. They are known as fish-skin Tartars. The fish they use is the tamara, a species of salmon. Both fish and skin of this fish are supposed to possess wonderful heat-giving properties.

GREAT ENGINEERING PROJECT IN INDIA.

May Have Length of Fifty Miles—Will be Great Help to Tea Growers.

An engineering project of no little commercial importance is about to be carried out in the Indian Ocean. The large and fertile island of Ceylon is to be connected with the peninsula of Hindustan by rail. For the new road, which will extend in a generally eastward direction from Muntapan, the present terminus of the Indian railway system, a foundation will be afforded most of the way by intervening islands and by a submerged reef in one of the few channels to be crossed. The line is likely to have a length of fifty miles or more, but in the route selected there are few marine gaps to be spanned. These will be closed with embankments, and for the benefit of coasting vessels, which might be inconvenienced by so continuous a barrier, a ship canal is to be constructed through one of the small islands, nearly at right angles with the railway.

CHIEF BENEFIT.

The chief benefit to be derived from the new road will be an improvement in the facilities of Ceylon tea growers for getting their products to market. Not only will quicker transportation than is now possible be available, but a better system of distribution will be at the disposal of the planters. It is probable also that the new road will be employed to hasten the delivery of London mails in some of the large cities of India. It is doubtful whether Bombay would gain anything by having letters put ashore at Colombo, the principal port of Ceylon, but Madras and Calcutta unquestionably would.

NOW PARTLY COMPLETED.

In its general characteristics the India-Ceylon line will resemble the extension of the Florida East Coast railway to Key West, now partly completed. The American road utilizes a succession of coral and keys for the support of its track. Between the two enterprises, however, there are at least two notable differences. The Florida road is carried from one island to the next by a trestle, not a solid embankment, probably at a lower cost than that involved in the Indian Ocean scheme, though possibly at greater risk. Moreover, the Key West road, when finished, will be devoted almost exclusively to passenger traffic, while the India-Ceylon line is expected to handle large quantities of freight.

BAAMBA PEOPLE ARE ADDICTED TO CANNIBALISM.

Account of Survey and Exploration of Lake Region of Central Africa.

Major R. G. T. Bright, C.M.G., gave an interesting account of survey and exploration in the Ruwenzori and Lake Region, Central Africa, before the Royal Geographical Society in London recently. The country described is in the neighborhood of the western border of the Uganda Protectorate and the Congo State.

Major Bright gave some interesting details regarding the natives of the country through which the expedition passed. The people of Bavira are noticeable by their women wearing a particularly disfiguring ornament in their upper lips—an embellished wooden disc from 2½ in. to 3 in. in diameter. The young men and women dress their hair with a mixture of light clay.

ELEPHANT COUNTRY.

The district between the Congolese stations Kasindi and Beni, Major Bright reported, is an ideal elephant country, and is tenanted by some large herds. The Etuli forest and the wooden slopes of Ruwenzori form veritable strongholds for elephants, while in the Toro Game Preserve devastated plantations and spoor testify to the numbers still living in and around the protected country. In the open country, on the southern shore of Lake Albert, when the palms are mazy, elephant and buffalo roam over them. The river Etuli is here tenanted by numberless hippopotami and crocodiles, the former of which are a danger to the canoes of the natives.

Lions enter the station at Fort Portal during the wet season, but, apparently, do little damage to human life or domesticated stock. They subsist mainly on the wild pig, a great scourge to the native's cultivation, and it is said that the natives prefer lions to the destructive wart-hog, and are chary of giving information to enable them to be hunted.

THEIR BELIEF.

The Bahima, or aristocracy of the tribes, believe vaguely in an all-powerful Deity, who is associated mainly with rain, thunder, and other weather phenomena. They endeavor to propitiate various devils, most of whom are connected with the prevalent diseases, by erecting joss-houses, in which food and beer are placed. To the Bahima devils the Baero (or serfs) add a considerable number of their own, the most important being Magasa, who eats their bananas in great quantities.

ADDICTED TO CANNIBALISM.

The Baamba people, living in the forest near the Etuli river are addicted to cannibalism of a particularly loathsome form. Families exchange their young children, who are then eaten. They are, nevertheless, a jovial people, although a constant warfare goes on between village and village. SIKH FOOLS A LAWYER.

He Was a Black Sheep, but Not as Bad as Prosecutor Thought.

There is a Sikh out in Victoria, B.C., who got himself out of a serious predicament by a clever ruse. He was up against the law and as he was something of a black sheep even among the Sikhs it looked as if it would go hard with him.

He had had a bad record in Hongkong and this was known to other Sikhs and to the prosecuting lawyer. So he arranged to have an unfriendly Sikh informed that for a crime in Hongkong he had been branded on the left arm. The unfriendly Sikh lost no time in passing the information to the prosecutor.

The lawyer held the information until he wanted to make a telling point at the trial. Then he pointed an accusing finger at the Sikh and called out sternly:

"Pull up the sleeve on your left arm and let the Court see the brand placed there by Hongkong justices."

The Sikh obeyed. His arm was without blemish. The unfriendly Sikh and the lawyer did not know that branding criminals is not in fashion in Hongkong. The point was so telling that the accused Sikh got off.

HEAVIEST RINGING BELL.

Tenor of the Peal in Exeter Cathedral.

Grandisson, the famous tenor of the peal of bells in Exeter Cathedral, has had a narrow escape from disaster, says the London Standard.

It was being rung during the Whitsuntide when a bolt which kept the clapper in position came out owing to the displacement of a pin. The result was that the clapper, which weighs well on toward two hundred-eight, also came out and fell as the bell was swinging. A good stout floor prevented the clapper from going into the ringing chamber below, where there were fifteen or sixteen ringers. The clapper was knocked clear by the bell itself, and beyond slight chipping of the lip Grandisson suffered no damage.

The bell is the heaviest used for ringing in the world, and has only once been rung single-handed through a peal, the ringer in that case being Mr. W. Pye, of London. Grandisson weighs seventy-two hundredweight, and if the stock be included something like four tons. The bells had not been rung for a twelvemonth, owing to repairs to the tower, and the present mishap is, therefore, particularly unfortunate.

SUBMARINE CABLES BURNED.

In recovering the telegraphic cables injured by the Sicilian earthquake in the Strait of Messina, the curious fact was noted that parts of the cables seemed to have been burned. This is regarded as confirming the hypothesis that the great disaster should be attributed to submarine volcanic explosions rather than to rock movements in the adjacent lands. The huge sea-waves that swept both coasts of the strait also indicate a submarine origin.

such bad teeth can only be attributed to the fact that the system of dietary is all wrong.

He advises us to eat for breakfast bacon, or bacon and eggs, baked or toasted bread, fresh fruit, and only drink tea or coffee when you have finished your meal, not during its course.

For lunch or dinner the surgeon advises a meat of some sort, followed by a sweet pudding (if you must), and then fruit. For the last meal, meat, ship's biscuits and butter and an apple.

It will surprise you to hear that he wholly objects to farinaceous diets, such as porridge, wheat cakes, and the like, for the reason, he declares, that if not followed by a fruit diet, which cleanses the teeth from deposits of food-matter, the immediate consequence will be to deprive the digestive organs of their lubricity, with an ultimate reaction occurring in the teeth.

The perfect tooth, without fissures, or clefts, or pits, is rarely found, except among children who have been very carefully watched by their parents during their years of rearing.

Faulty molecular structure of the teeth is accentuated by the mischievous dietary of the children. Many little ones are allowed to grind up unlimited quantities of hard bake when they have not long passed the teething stage. As they grow older in years, chocolates are showered upon them and so the poor molars, are given no chance.

Of all the foods which have a bad effect on the teeth, starch and sugar foods are the worst and those who have the care of children, or who are themselves addicted to eating starch or sugar foods, should never omit to cleanse the teeth.

Mastication is one of the conditions necessary to a proper exercise of the digestive functions, and consequently to the attainment and preservation of perfect bodily health.

When one eats soft foods, it is certain that little gastric juice is produced, and if sugar forms a main constituent of these foods, the quality of the juice exuded is very specially vitiated.

Vegetarians have rarely good teeth, for the reason that their foods are not of sufficient hardness to produce a sufficient quantity of gastric fluid to lubricate the digestive organs properly. The consequence is the teeth soon show signs of decay.

If you must indulge in farinaceous foods, and have what is known as a "sweet tooth," you must neutralise their effects upon the teeth with fruit.

THE WIDOW'S CAP.

The widow's cap is a survival of an old Roman custom. Widows were obliged to wear their weeds for ten months, and the bereaved woman shaved her head as a token of mourning. Naturally the widow could not very well appear in public with a bald head, so dainty caps were made in order to hide the disfigurement. The cap still remains, though the immediate necessity for its existence has long passed away.

exchange their young children, who are then eaten. They are, nevertheless, a jovial people, although a constant warfare goes on between village and village. Each village has a club-house, furnished with a few rough boughs three-legged chairs, made of the forked boughs of a tree, on which the members lie. The men gather here to talk and smoke.

SEVERAL TRIBES.

The Batwa or Bambutu inhabit the forest on both sides of the Etuli. They stand about 4ft. high, and are long-armed, short-legged, and ugly. The legs are disproportionately short, the feet large, and the body is covered with a sort of down. Both sexes affect a state of complete nudity. Though there are several different tribes of pygmies, they appear to have no tribal organization. It is the custom for a group of families to attach themselves to a negro chief, and, in return for food, to assist him to fight his enemies. The standard of morality of these little people is high, and strange to say, they are remarkably intelligent. The wild beasts living in this forest are killed for food, even the elephant. Poisoned arrows are used for the purpose.

WHY THEY MOVED.

The Bingses, mother and daughter, had long outstayed their welcome at their country friend's house. Moreover, they evinced no sign of going away, nor did the mother seem to be in any way affected by the strong hints to go which the overtaxed hostess drew out from time to time. Finally, forbearance exhausted, the entertainer decided to reach the mother through her daughter. So one day, calling the little visitor to her, she said, "Maimie, when do you expect to go home?"

"Oh, I'm sure I don't know," was the careless reply. "We've several other places to stop at yet."

"Well, when do you go on to the next place?"

"Can't even tell that. Mamma says it's immaterial to her just when she'll leave here."

"But, my dear child," exclaimed the exasperated hostess, "doesn't your mother realize how costly living is these days?"

"Oh, yes; she knows how dear it is. That's why she left the city."

"Well Maimie, I cannot afford to entertain visitors any longer, and I wish you'd tell your mother that at once."

"Is that an insult?" rejoined the child, turning haughtily to the speaker.

"Why do you ask that, child?" "Because when we're insulted we go on to the next place!"

WHERE TO LIVE LONG.

Yarmouth, England, is living up to the reputation Charles Dickens gave it when he advised the purchase of an annuity and residence at Yarmouth to attain the age of Methuselah. The annual report of its medical officer of health, issued recently, states that in 1903 the average rate of mortality was much below the previous ten years and was two per thousand lower than the corrected average death rate for the seventy-six great towns, so that on its population of 50,000 no fewer than 100 lives were saved last year as compared with the mortality in the country generally.

OTTAWA NEWS.

The National Transcontinental Railway, its cost, and the fact that Mr. Lumsden, chief engineer, has resigned, are matters now claiming the attention of the leading Conservative papers.

Gross Misrepresentation.

In this connection the usual amount of misrepresentation appears, and figures are given of the probable cost of the road from Moncton to Winnipeg, and the whole is placed before the people in a most unpatriotic and un-Canadian light for the sole purpose of injuring the Government in the eyes of the people, and discrediting the administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The Mail demands of the Government that the reasons for Mr. Lumsden's resignation be at once made public, thus acknowledging that the reasons are unknown to the Mail. Immediately following, in the same article, appear in full the reasons why this official resigned, reasons supplied by the Mail.

The cost of the road is said to be $250,000,000, of which $181,000,000 is for the Moncton to Winnipeg section. These were the figures presented by Mr. Borden. The Conservative press seized upon these figures, and promptly circulated the slanderous and mischievous statement that the Government built section from Moncton to Winnipeg would cost $250,000,000, whereas it was originally estimated by the Government that the cost to the people, in money, would be something about $20,000,000.

Either wilfully or ignorantly the Tory press does not present the facts to the people. There are two points that should be made clear.

What is the Cost?

"The first is that the cost to the people of the Moncton to Winnipeg section is the interest on the money invested for seven years of the lease, after which the Grand Trunk Pacific carries the burden itself and Canada has no burden to bear. The interest for the first seven years, including interest during construction and interest for the shops east of Winnipeg and terminals at Quebec would be $26,859,676. Making allowances for minor inaccuracies in the calculation, all the burden that is placed on the Dominion of Canada for 1,800 miles of railway from Moncton to Winnipeg is $26,859,676. Two of the average yearly surpluses would wipe this out altogether.

The second point is that the total cost of the Moncton to Winnipeg section, gross cost, will not exceed the sum of $124,400,000, and it is the interest only upon this sum that the Government will pay for a period of seven years only.

There is a vast difference between the sum of $26,859,676 and $250,000,000, but it does not suit the policy of Conservative papers to make this point clear.

Why Original Estimate Exceeded.

Much is made of the fact that the

be permanent and workable at the minimum of expense.

This explains the additional cost over the estimates of 1903. The road is well built. It pays to build a road well, economy is not found in a cheap article. Millions of dollars have been expended and miles of track abandoned by the Canadian Pacific in overcoming some of the curves and grades which distinguished the road when it was first constructed. The Moncton to Winnipeg section is being built right at the start, and is the most scientifically constructed railroad in the world to-day.

By making a good road by bringing grades down to the finest point, the Government are doing the best they can to cheapen transportation. If the people of Canada are building a more expensive road than they contemplated in 1903, they will get the benefit in cheaper freight rates many times over.

Hodgins Charges Withdrawn.

So much for the reasons which explain the increased cost of the road. Another point raised is that Mr. Lumsden resigned because he found the Hodgins charges justified. This is ridiculous.

The evidence in the Hodgins affair established beyond question that the charges were absolutely without foundation. Major Hodgins not only failed to prove the charges, but specifically withdrew them, and unqualifiedly exonerated the commissioners and their engineers from any improper conduct or undue influence over officials over them, or of collusion with the contractors.

Major Hodgins also repudiated the interview with himself upon which the charges were based. In fact the whole thing collapsed, and nothing more was heard of it until the resurrection a few weeks ago of the half-forgotten incident by the Tory press. In an attempt to find some connection between these charges and the resignation of Mr. Lumsden.

Grand Trunk Engineer Concurred.

During the Hodgins investigation it was shown that there had been a discussion and correspondence between Mr. Lumsden and the divisional and resident engineers on the Moncton to Winnipeg section, as to the classification of solid rock, loose rock and common excavation, and that on 9th January, 1908, an interpretation was decided upon by Mr. Lumsden, which was agreed to by Mr. Woods, assistant chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, which has been acted upon since that date.

What Committee Found.

To mix up the Hodgins charges with the resignation of Mr. Lumsden is to acquit the Government of all responsibility. The committee of investigation in the Hodgins affair found that Major Hodgins not only failed to prove the charges as contained in the "Colonist," both in the letter and interviews but that he specifically withdrew them, and has unqualifiedly exonerated the commissioners and their engineers from any improper conduct or undue influence over officials under them, or of collusion with the contractors, and that if questions as to classification arise they should be decided by the tribunal previously provided therefore by the statute.

Remember These Things.

The people of Canada should bear in mind these simple facts:

The country pays for seven years the interest only on cost of construction of the eastern division of the railway from Moncton to Winnipeg, amounting to $26,859,676.

That the total cost of that portion of the road will be about $124,000,000, and not $250,000,000.

That the charges made by Major

Winnipeg to Edmonton.]

The last steel rail between Winnipeg and Edmonton has been laid, and within a few weeks ballasting will have been completed between those two points.

Government Acted Wisely.

The Government acted wisely in building the most up-to-date railway that was possible. The fact that the science of railway building is advancing, and that the Government is taking advantage of the latest scientific adjuncts and incorporating them in the road. The fact that wages are higher under the present Government than ever before in the history of the country. The fact that railway material costs more money than formerly, are all evidences of the country's prosperity, and the increased cost of the road should not be attributed to extravagance but to the legitimate reasons given here.

The expensive portions of the Canadian Pacific have been rebuilt since the road was declared completed thirty years ago. Mile for mile there is very little doubt but the Canadian Pacific has cost the same as the Grand Trunk Pacific is costing, if the figures could be secured. The people of Canada demand the best road that money will buy, and they are getting it. The petty fault-finding of the Conservative press in regard to cost will meet with no sympathy from the people. It has not been even alleged that the

There is a vast difference between the sum of $26,859,676 and $250,000, but it does not suit the policy of Conservative papers to make this point clear.

Why Original Estimate Exceeded.

Much is made of the fact that the earlier estimates of cost have been greatly exceeded. Why was this? The increased cost is due chiefly to two reasons, first the greater cost of material and labor, and second the improvement of the standard of the road over what was intended by the first estimate.

Inasmuch as one of the reasons alleged by the Conservative press for the resignation of Mr. Lumsden, is the increased cost of the road, it would be interesting to read what Mr. Lumsden said on this point in a memorandum sent to the Government. In this memorandum he says:

What Chief Engineer Says.

"The apparent high cost per mile is accounted for from the fact that heretofore no railway for such a length has, in the first instance, been constructed through a similar country with the low grades and curvatures used by us, viz., 0.4 per 100 feet adverse to eastbound, and 0.6 per 100 feet adverse to westbound traffic, excepting at two points, with sharpest curvature 6 degrees (955 feet radius) and permanent structures. I may also add that with few exceptions all the structures provided for are permanent in character, culverts being of concrete and bridges of steel with concrete sub-structures.

"Had we used grades of 1 per cent, in either direction, curves of 10 per cent, and a large number of timber structures, which has been a common practice heretofore in similar countries, the cost might have been reduced nearly a third, but the operating and maintenance expenses would have been enormously increased."

This is the testimony of Mr. Lumsden Chief Engineer of the Railway Commission, as to why the cost of the railway is greater than was at first contemplated. The Tory press could do no better than print this explanation, a perfectly natural one, instead of charging the Government with extravagance and improvidence.

What G. T. P. Engineer Says.

The Chief Engineer of the Western division of the road also sent to the Government his testimony of the cause of increased cost. This is what he says in part:

"A question has arisen as to the estimated cost of construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific prepared in 1903 being so far in excess of the estimated cost today. The explanation is simple. The reason is two-fold—first, the general increase in cost of labor and materials; and second, the superior character of the eastern section of the road as being constructed compared with its character as contemplated in 1903."

Wages and Material Higher.

Since 1903, the rate of wages for ordinary and skilled labor used in railway building has increased 25 per cent, and the cost of lumber, timber and ties has increased 35 per cent. The price of steel rails has gone up from $25 to $35 per ton, an advance of 40 per cent.

Not That Kind of Road.

The estimates made in 1903 were based upon a road with maximum grades and curves, and timber culverts and structures, such as are found in the ordinary railroad of Canada. Whereas the structures upon the Moncton to Winnipeg section are of steel with sub-structure of concrete. There are 228 of these steel bridges in this section alone. The road now being built is costly but up-to-date and will be the interest only on cost of construction of the eastern division of the railway from Moncton to Winnipeg, amounting to $26,859,676.

That the total cost of that portion of the road will be about $124,000,000, and not $250,000,000.

That the charges made by Major Hodgins were withdrawn by him before the committee appointed to investigate them.

That the reason the Moncton to Winnipeg section of the road is costing more than the original estimate, is on account of the character of the road, being far superior to what was contemplated, and the increased cost of labor and supplies.

That the western division will earn money from the start, and therefore the Government will never be called upon to pay a dollar of guarantee on the bonds.

That the extra cost of the road will be compensated for in the cheaper traffic rates that the company will be able to offer, owing to low grades and lesser working expenses and maintenance.

What the Road Means.

When considering what the completion of this road means to Canada, any argument directed at the cost appears ridiculous and un-Canadian. What does it mean to Canada?

It will double the industrial and productive area of the country, and roll up the map of Canada 300 miles to the northward.

It will provide competition in rates for the farmers of the West and the manufacturers of the East.

It will be the only all-British railway across the continent under one management.

It will develop vast coal fields in the Saskatchewan, Athabaska and Peace river for the supply of fuel to the prairies.

It will give to the most northwesterly part of the prairie region, which is furthest from the Atlantic, a short outlet to the Pacific.

It will connect the railway system of Canada with 2,000 miles of steamboat navigation on the Athabasca, Peace, Laird and Mackenzie rivers, their great lakes, and the Arctic Ocean.

It will develop mining and lumbering in Northern British Columbia, and provide facilities for profitable interchange of mutual necessities between the prairies and the mountain regions of the far west.

It ensures a third railway outlet from and through the great wheat fields of the West to the lakes.

It will develop a thousand miles of Northern Ontario and Quebec at present unknown and inaccessible.

It induces the investment of $150,000,000 of British capital in Canada, and correspondingly interests the British investing public in Canadian affairs.

It provides for the co-operation of the Grand Trunk Company, thus insuring business from the start, and secures the Government from payment on its guarantee.

It places all points in Eastern Canada in direct connection with the West without extra cost.

It transfers the through traffic interests of the Grand Trunk from the United States to Canada.

It provides shipping facilities for the thousands of farmers who were compelled to locate land outside the land grant of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

One might enumerate many other advantages which will accrue to the country from the building of this great

Itch, Mange, Prairie Scratches, Barber's Itch, and every form of contagious Itch on human or animals cured in 30 minutes by Wolford's Sanitary Lotion. It never fails. Sold by—T. B. Wallace cost the same as the figures could be secured. The people of Canada demand the best road that money will buy, and they are getting it. The petty fault-finding of the Conservative press in regard to cost will meet with no sympathy from the people. It has not been even alleged that one dollar has been improperly paid out. The Auditor-General attends to that, and the entire system has been offered at public competition, and every contractor in the Dominion had an equal chance to bid for the work.

People Will Wonder.

In a few years from now, when there comes a demand for yet another trans-continental system, the people will wonder how business was transacted before the Grand Trunk Pacific was built. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was authorized to complete his work, and he will not be turned aside by the ravings of a hostile and prejudiced press.

ASTRONOMY.

Its Exactness Illustrated by the Discovery of Neptune.

There is perhaps no more striking illustration of the power of scientific method than that relating to the discovery of Neptune in 1846. The planet Uranus, until then the outermost known member of our solar system, refused to follow the path computed for it by mathematical astronomers. With the progress of time the discrepancies between its predicted and observed positions grew constantly larger until in the early eighteen-forties the discordance amounted to fully seventy-five seconds of arc. This is a small angle, not more than one-twenty-fifth the angular diameter of our moon, yet a very large angle to refined astronomy, for a discrepancy of two seconds would have been detected with ease. The opinion gradually developed that Uranus was drawn from its natural course by the attractions of an undiscovered planet still farther from the sun than itself. Adams in 1843 and Le Verrier in 1845 independently and each without knowledge of the other's plans attacked the then extremely difficult problem of determining the approximate orbit, mass and position of an undiscovered body whose attractions should produce the perturbations observed. Regrettable and avoidable delays occurred in searching for the planet after Adams' results were communicated to the astronomer royal in October, 1845. Le Verrier's results were communicated to the Berlin observatory in September, 1846, with the request that a search be made. The disturbing planet, later named Neptune, was found on the first evening that it was looked for less than one degree of arc from the position assigned by Le Verrier. If an energetic search had been made in England the year before the planet would have been discovered within two degrees of the position assigned by Adams.—Professor W. W. Campbell in Popular Science Monthly.

The Smuggled Box.

A joker had some fun with the customs officials at New York some years ago. A servant had gone ashore from a German liner with a basket and was about to leave the pier when a passenger whispered to a customs officer that he had better see what the basket contained. Following the tip, the basket bearer was detained, and a wooden box was found among a lot of soiled linen. The box contained another and this still another box, the third securely fastened with screws. When these were removed a card was discovered on which was written in three languages, "This is the 1st of April. Many happy returns of the day."

CHANGED HIS MIND.

Influence of a Game of Golf Upon a Man's Life.

A New York pastor received a call in his study one morning not long ago from a man with whom he had a pleasant but not intimate acquaintance. And the visitor told him without much ado that he had called on a peculiar errand.

"Some time ago," he said, "as you know, I lost my wife. I have no children, I have no kinsfolk, and I am very lonely in the world. Last week, by an unlucky speculation, I lost my whole fortune. I am therefore without companionship, without occupation, without money. I am too old to start again, and I have no joy in life as it is. I have deliberately decided, therefore, to commit suicide. And I called to tell you of my purpose and to ask the favor of you that when my body is found you will make such an explanation as your good judgment and kindly feeling toward me may suggest. I have come simply to ask this favor and not to argue the question, which I have settled for myself. If you do me this last service I shall be very grateful."

The preacher said little and was far too wise to undertake to dissuade him, but he permitted the man to say all that he had to say without interruption.

Then as he was going away the preacher called to him and said:

"I have not seen you on the golf links for some time. You use to enjoy the game."

"Yes," said the other.

"Well, go out and play one more game today before you carry out your purpose."

The man smiled for the first time and went to the golf course and—he is living yet.

Old Time Gas Charges.

The price of gas in the early part of the last century is shown by a schedule of charges issued by the Liverpool Gaslight company in the year 1817. Instead of so much per cubic foot being levied each individual burner was charged for, and the price varied according to the hour at which the light was to be extinguished. Thus for using one No. 1 Argand burner up till 8 p. m. £3 per annum had to be paid. For the right to keep it alight until 9 £3 18s. was the figure, while those roistering blades who sat up till 10, 11 or 12 had to disburse £4 10s., £5 12s. and £6 8s. respectively. Imagine the gas bill at a house where ten or twelve burners are flaring away until the small hours if such a method of taxation were in force nowadays!—Liverpool Post.

Insincerity.

"Our civilization demands a greater or less degree of mendacity," remarked the abstruse person. "We are constantly encountering some empty phrase, some conventional remark, which is absolutely devoid of sincerity."

"That's right," answered the book agent. "That's perfectly true. I am reminded of it every time I walk up to the front step where there is a doormat with the word 'welcome' on it."

when she charges, for in nine cases out of ten after a dash that may be for a few hundred yards or a mile he will reverently circle back to an interception of his own trail, stand hidden in grass or thicket until his pursuer comes plodding along the trail and then charge upon him. Despite the fierce temper of a lone bull, his savage cunning and his great, charging bulk, I believe him much less dangerous than the lion, for he has far less speed, lacks the lion's poisoned claws and is a much bigger target. This opinion is substantiated by the indisputable fact that at least ten men are killed or maimed by lion to one killed by buffalo.—Edgar Beecher Bronson in Century.

The Temple of Zeus.

All that remains of the great temple of Zeus, which was 700 years in building, is to be found about 150 yards from the foot of the Acropolis at Athens. The ruins consist of sixteen columns of the Corinthian order, six and one-half feet in diameter and sixty feet high. It was the second largest temple erected by the Greeks, one superior to it in size being the temple of Diana at Ephesus. According to a legend, its foundation was built by Dukallon, the Greek Noah, who from this point witnessed the waters of the flood subside. An opening in the ground is said to be the orifice through which the flood disappeared.

Amended.

In a book of musical criticism the author alluded to "flattering terms to the works of his friend Herr Q. Unfortunately during the printing of the volume the two friends quarreled. Then the offended author had inserted in each copy of the book a slip of paper with the following note: "Erratum, page 94, line 21, for 'Herr Q., the eminent composer and distinguished musician,' read 'Herr Q., the pretentious violinist and impudent and clumsy plagiarist!'"—London Mail.

Testing Dear Little Fido's Milk.

"A man's religion never dies so long as he uses the Golden Rule in measuring his actions."

Heat Conductors.

Some substances conduct heat more freely than others, silver among the metals being the best conductor, and as a unit of measurement is taken at 1,000. Compared with silver as a conductor, gold is 981, copper 845, zinc 641, tin 422, steel 257 and wrought iron 436. Glass, wood, gases, liquids and resinous substances are bad conductors. Water is such a poor conductor that if heat is applied to the top it will boil at the top, while the bottom will remain cold.

One of Andrew Carnegie's Early Iron Experiences.

Andrew Carnegie once stated that a short time after the starting of his first plant in Pittsburgh he had an odd experience with iron ore.

"I was offered some ore that sampled about the usual grade, so far as I was able to judge from appearances, at a reduced price," he said. "I bought several thousand tons—a big order for those days. The second day after we commenced to run it the foreman came to the office and told me the new ore was of no account, that it did not flow and that the furnaces were so choked they would have to be dumped unless some remedy was found. Those fires were built to last two years, and to dump them at this time would mean so heavy a loss as to practically put me out of business. A young chemist had called on me a few weeks before, and, while I had not paid much attention to him, I had kept his card. It occurred to me that he might possibly be of some help, though I confess I did not then see what chemistry had to do with the iron business. But I sent for him, and he came at once. First he examined the new ore and then the old that we had been running without difficulty, and finally he looked at the furnaces. To avoid delay he made a little test of the two ores right there. I had told him when he arrived that I felt sure the new ore was worthless and admitted my mistake in buying it. Of course I did this as I did not want him to think I was ignorant of the business. You can imagine my surprise, then, when at the conclusion of his test he quietly informed us that the new ore was so good we did not know how to run it. The fact was that the new ore contained 20 per cent more iron than the old, and all that it was necessary to do was to add a proportionate increase of flux to bring about reduction."—American Industries.

taken anywhere, in any part of the globe, the humans face the camera as if they wanted to be taken. It may be vanity, but they all seem to like to get into the picture.

"Take a group picture made anywhere, say among your own tribe. Note the people in the rear with necks craned to get out from behind blanketing people in front, so that their faces will show. Shyness or modesty may keep some who are in the background from doing this, but unless the photographer has personally posed every member of the group so that he will show you will always find in such pictures some figures of persons who would otherwise been more or less obscured, but who have so disposed themselves as to make sure that their faces show.

"So of any set group, and the same would be true of any sort of picture in which many persons were taken, as at a banquet or a wedding. People like to get into a picture.

"Just how true this is appears in many ways in all sorts of pictures—in pictures in which people are not the main but only incidental or subordinate features, as of accidents or ruins or scenes of a great variety of sorts. In such pictures where the presence of the camera was known you will always find some persons facing or turning toward the photographer, with an evident desire to get into the picture, and it is easy to imagine that the gratification of seeing themselves there may give them pleasure.

"Look at pictures taken of semi-savage or semi-civilized people in remotest countries, where perhaps they had never seen a mirror or heard of a camera, but you may be sure that human vanity exists as it does with us, and you may see somebody trying to get into the picture or smiling to look well in it.

JARRED THE SULTAN.

Advice General Wallace is Said to Have Given About Hamid II.

When General Lew Wallace was the American plenipotentiary in Constantinople he saw Abdul Hamid II. at close quarters—too close for comfort really—but his involuntary inspection was decidedly convincing as to the sultan's timidity.

It seems that from the day of his presentation to the sultan the general had grown in favor at the court and was frequently "commanded" to attend merely from the personal liking of Abdul Hamid for the American minister and the enjoyment of conversation with him. In those days the sultan was particularly vexed over affairs in Egypt. He felt that Egypt was his personal property, yet England had taken the control of the country out of his hands entirely. She had hardly said "by your leave," but had "advised" him that for the good of Egypt he, Abdul Hamid II., had better let her and then had gone ahead.

He had accepted the advice because he had nothing to say "no" with. Without a fleet what could any one say to England? This forced acquiescence worried the sultan, continuously until he could not endure longer without madness. In his distress he summoned General Wallace and described to him in detail his humiliating condition.

The general listened with friendly sympathy, and the sultan, being relieved in thus talking in confidence to a man whom he knew to be sincere and altogether free from selfish interests, asked the minister what he could do under the circumstances. General Wallace said that he appreciated the trust and confidence of the sultan, but that, being the representative officially of the United States of America, he could not advise the ruler of another country as to what steps that ruler should take against a third power, especially when this third power was on friendly terms with his own country.

The sultan acknowledged the correctness of this position, but besought the general to make an exception, saying that there was no other man in the empire to whom he could go for one single word of honest, disinterested advice. But the general repeated that he could not be false to his duty as a minister and envoy from his government.

Then said the sultan, "Tell me as a private individual; tell me as a friend."

This appeal touched General Wallace deeply, and he said, "As a friend, then, and a private citizen, I will say this, that were I in the position you have described to me I should put myself at the head of my troops and fight to the bitter end."

At these words the blood left the sultan's face, and he fell to the floor in a dead faint. He felt their truth, and he knew, furthermore, that he lacked the strength of character, the force, the will power, to carry out such a program.

What would have happened had the sultan's heart been physically weak as well is not easy to conjecture. As it was, General Wallace did not leave the Yildiz kiosk until long after the hour he had intended, and Abdul Hamid II. never again sought a confidential interview with the author of "Ben-Hur."

ORGANIC EVOLUTION.

How Nature Changes Her Plans to Meet New Conditions.

In the course of organic evolution very many strange and quaint developments present themselves from time to time, not only in the history of a race or genus, but within the narrow compass of the life of a single individual member of such race or genus. Nature changes her plans, in fact, to meet contingencies that occur unexpectedly. Probably few who have any acquaintance with marine fish have failed to notice something strange about the appearance of what are called flatfish, known as the flounder family (or in zoology as pleuronectidae), embracing the turbot, plaice, brill, sole, halibut, flounder, dab, etc. The conformation of the head and of the anterior portion of the body in the adult stage is characterized by a strained and unsymmetrical appearance. In this respect the flatfish differ from all other members of their zoological class.

The question naturally suggests itself why this particular genus should be so different from all other fish, which, as a rule, are remarkable for their symmetrical and graceful appearance. And the answer is very simple. The flatfish, instead of swimming in an upright or vertical position, like all other fish, has for some reason or another taken to the unnatural habit of swimming on its side. It may be on either side—right or left. This enables it to take up what appears to be the lazy position of lying flat on the bottom of the sea, where it can move about freely in search of such food as small marine animals, mollusks, worms, etc. The young fish swims erect in the ordinary manner for some time, but it early shows a tendency to become lopsided and gradually falls over on one side, usually the left, but not invariably so by any means.

The eye on the under side, just so soon as the tendency is shown to fall over on that side, commences gradually to move round to the other or uppermost side and finally takes its places beside the other eye.

This process is strangely brought about through the twisting of a portion of the bones of the head, which gives the latter a decidedly deformed and unnatural appearance. The ventral fins become useless and degenerate. Unpaired fins are developed, the undulatory motion of which enables the fish to swim with ease and even rapidly in the new and horizontal position assumed.

Convinced.

"I have never taken much stock in the idea that a man's character can be read in his face. I believe you pretend, however, to have some skill as a physiognomist."

"Yes; I have given considerable study to the subject."

"Well, look at this young fellow coming here. Now (after they have passed the young man), what does his face show?"

"It should say he was a young man of steady habit."

"By George! There's something in it after all! Ever since the night I ordered him not to call on my daughter again he has steadily refused to recognize me!"

NEWSPAPER SUMMARY OF FRUIT CROP REPORT.

Weather conditions in Canada have been favorable during the month of June for fruit development.

Apples—Western Canada will have a large crop of winter apples from present indications. Early and small varieties will not yield as heavily.

The apple prospects in British Columbia will hardly reach the average.

Pears—An average crop is expected in the commercial pear sections of Ontario.

Pums are estimated somewhat lower, generally, since the heavy bloom, but are showing for an average crop, except in British Columbia where the crop will be light.

Peaches—Early peaches are reported medium to full crop; late peaches medium. "Curl leaf" is very prevalent, affecting Elbertas particularly.

Grapes—Concords promise a full crop; white and red grapes, medium to full crop.

Cherries will be a good average crop.

The trainer also says that he was in charge of a station at Melita, where the firms had been shipping large consignments of tropical animals. He transshipped them, he said, to Fort Melindi, where they were liberated. Aged lions, deer, hipopotami, consumptive leopards, which had been in captivity so long that they would feed out of the trainer's hands, and several gnus were secured from the animal shows of Europe in exchange for better specimens were shipped to Melita.

In support of his claims Locatelli, who came to America to seek employment in Canada, cites the unusual number of wild animals in the neighborhood of Mombasa. He claims that lions have wandered into the streets in the villages looking for food, and the natives have been amazed at their lack of fear and of ferocity.

AFTER SUFFERING YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Fox Creek, N.B.—"I have always had pains in the loins and a weakness there, and often after my meals my food would distress me and cause soreness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better, and I can walk with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it, as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers."—Mrs. WILLIAM BOURQUE, Fox Creek, N.B., Canada.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

Congressman Cale, of Alaska, well known on Pacific Slope.

Gen. W. H. Parsons.

Gen. W. H. Parsons is ex-State Senator and ex-Special Judge of the Supreme Court of Texas, also Brigadier General in Confederate Army. In a recent letter from 925 H St., N. W., Washington, D.
C., this prominent gentleman says:

"Upon the recommendation of personal friends and many strong testimonials as to the efficacy of Peruna in the treatment of the numerous symptoms of the la grippe with which I have been afflicted for four months past, I have been induced to undergo a treatment with this justly celebrated formula. I feel a decided change for the better after using it only one week. It is especially good in toning up the stomach and has had a decided effect upon my appetite. I therefore feel much encouraged that I am on the road to complete restoration.

"My numerous friends in Texas, where I have had the honor to command a brigade of her Veteran Cavalry in a four years' war, may accept this voluntary testimonial to the merits of Peruna as a sense of obligation on my part for its wonderful efficacy."

Col. Wm. Bailey.

William Bailey, 58 I St., N. E., Washington, D. C., Past Col. Enc. No. 69, Union Veteran Legion, and prominently identified with many of the great labor protective associations in Chicago and New York, and Secretary of one of the largest associations in the former city, had for nearly thirty years been afflicted with kidney troubles.

Within a short period he has been persuaded to try Peruna, and his present healthy condition is attributed to his judicious use of that great remedy.
Washington climate is notoriously bad for kidney and liver troubles, yet by a judicious use of the remedy he is now quite cured and in excellent physical condition.

This brief statement of facts, without exaggeration or hyperbole, appears to tell the whole story, which the Peruna Com- pany is authorized to use, if it so chooses, believing, as I do, that by so doing it will be for the general good.—Wm. Bailey.

Col. C. L. Patten.

Col. C. L. Patten, 509 T St., N. W., Washington, D. C., a Lieutenant in the Old Guard, an exclusive organization composed of soldiers of distinction who fought in the civil war, and a Thirty-second degree Mason, writes as follows:

"I have used Peruna, and desire to recommend your remedy as an invigorating spring tonic; also one of the best remedies that I ever tried for coughs, colds and catarrhal complaints."

Hon. R. S. Ryan.

Hon. R. S. Ryan, now residing in Nome, Alaska, was formerly a member of the English House of Parliament, and Secretary to the late Irish patriot, Charles Stewart Parnell. His Washington address is New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C. He writes: "I have used *Peas a very effective cure for colds and catarrhal complaints."

Hon. Thomas Cale.

Hon. Thomas Cale, elected to Congress from Alaska, is well known on the Pavery efficient remedy for *coughs and

An Essay on Habit.

A schoolmaster once said to his pupils that to the boy who would make the best piece of composition in five minutes on "How to Overcome Habit," he would give a prize. When the five minutes had expired a lad of nine years stood up and said: "Well, sir, habit is hard to overcome. If you take off the first letter, it does not change 'abit.' If you take off another, you still have a 'bit' left. If you take off still another, the whole of 'it' remains. If you take off another, it is not totally used up, all of which goes to show that if you want to get rid of habit you must throw it off altogether." Result, he won it.

Long Reigns.

Louis XIV., King of France, ascended the throne on the 14th of May, 1643, and occupied it till his death on the 1st of September, 1715, a period of seventy-two years and 110 days. He was succeeded by his great-grandson, who became Louis XV. and reigned for nearly fifty-nine years, those two reigns amounting in the aggregate to 131 years, which is another record.
If ancient records are to be believed, King Pepy II. of Egypt enjoyed a reign extending over the extraordinary period of ninety-four years.

A Boomerang.

Little Archie, aged four, had been very troublesome all day and especially trying to his father, who had had to stay at home as he was not well enough to go to work. In the evening, after the little fellow had said his prayers, his father called him, thinking it a good time to say a "word in season" and began by asking, "My son, why is it that father and mother have had to punish you so often to-day?" Archie thought a minute and then to his father's discomfort replied, "I guess it was cos you were both sick and cross to-day."

THE MYSTERIOUS KEY

OR, PLANNING FOR THE FUTURE.

CHAPTER IX.

Everything thus far has resulted most satisfactory for Mr. John Hubbard—at least, so it seemed, as seen through his rose-tinted spectacles. His plans had all dovetailed in the most beautiful manner, moving along so smoothly and encouragingly that his temper had scarcely been ruffled throughout the lawsuit involving the Brewster property, during which his manner had been characterized by an urbanity and self-sufficiency which seemed to bespeak a conscience at peace with itself and the world in general because of duty well done.

Then, almost immediately, had followed his marriage with "Miss Anna Brewster," a romantic sequel to the remarkable case, as the papers expressed it, and thus the great fortune for which he had so long been scheming had at last dropped, like a plum fully ripe, directly into his grasp, and he fondly believed that henceforth he would sail over a smooth sea of prosperity, without a fear of even an untoward breeze to ruffle its calm surface.

Mr. John Hubbard had grown young-looking and debonair since his marriage. His barber gave him the nicest possible care, steaming and massaging the wrinkles and crow's feet out of his face so skillfully that the man gradually acquired a habit of smiling fondly at himself whenever he looked in the glass.

His clothing was of the finest material and of the latest cut; his linen immaculate; his one diamond flawless; his gloves and footgear above criticism; consequently, he made a very presentable bridegroom, and his forty years appeared to sit very lightly upon him.

He also seemed to be proportionately proud of, and devoted to, his handsome young wife, who created quite a sensation wherever they went, and thus, of course, increased the importance of her liege lord. Anna Brown had known all her life that she was more than ordinarily good-looking, and she had always chafed sorely against the bondage of her poverty.

Especially had this been the case since her father's death, for that event had made it necessary for her to share the treadmill life of her mother, the combined labor of both being hardly sufficient to keep the wolf from the door; therefore, she had for a long time to forego the gratification of her vanity and taste in matters of dress.

She had a fine form—tall, straight and somewhat inclined toward voluptuousness. She was a clear brunette, with brilliant, wine-brown eyes, dark brown hair and brows, good features, perfect teeth, and vividly scarlet lips.

She had acquired a fair education, having attended a high school until the death of her father, and, being quick-witted and observing, she was thus enabled to make a very good appearance under the course, supplying all the necessary funds for these changes.

Shortly after the Brewster case was decided in their favor, Anna willingly plighted her hand in marriage to her benefactor, when, for the few days that remained previous to their departure for Europe, they all went to live in one of the up-town hotels, where the bride immediately became absorbed in preparing an outfit suitable for her position.

Under the genial influence of a sense of plenty, with all the money that she wanted to spend, to say nothing of costly jewels and laces, which her husband deemed it fitting that she should possess, the girl suddenly bloomed into a real beauty—a woman whom, as far as her personal appearance was concerned, any man might be proud to call his wife.

She grew light-hearted and happy, and, with a feeling of profound gratitude toward the man who had been her deliverer from a galling bondage fresh in her heart, she exerted herself to please him in every way; and thus, to all appearance, they were a very contented and devoted couple, in spite of the palpable difference in their ages.

While on shipboard, they both became very sociable with their fellow voyagers, aiding very materially in the amateur entertainments which were arranged for the amusement of their little, floating world, and thus making many friends among the passengers. Arriving in London, they established themselves at the Langham, when they went everywhere, saw everything, and spent money at libitum.

They "did" the principal places of interest in England, Scotland, and Ireland; then flitted across the channel to "gay, delightful Paris," where they intended to remain for a couple of months, then go to Rome for the remainder of the winter.

They were both in excellent spirits. Mr. Hubbard was especially contented with his lot, for he was really becoming quite fond and proud of his stylish and pretty wife, and mentally asserted to himself that he had never realized what it was to live until now, when, with more money than he really knew what to do with, with not a care in the world but to live luxuriously, dress becomingly and gratify every caprice of his own and the smiling woman beside him, he could roam withersoever he pleased, and fear no man.

One fine day in November they bowed along the smooth, beautiful roads in their elegant, noiselessly rolling carriage, behind a pair of fleet-footed, coal-black horses, in gold-mounted harness, chatting socially and enjoying every moment, until they finally drove ostentatiously into the courtyard of their hotel, where obsequious servants sprang forward to open the carriage door, relieve "madame" of her judge; but why do you always ask about the age of people, Anna?" Mr. Hubbard inquired, his face clouding a trifle.

"I do not know," she replied flushing slightly. "I suppose it is the natural curiosity of my sex cropping out," she added, laughing lightly.

He stood looking at her for a moment.

"Do you long for young company, Anna? Are you beginning to be a little sorry that you have not a younger husband?" he then queried, a tinge of anxiety in his tone.

The girl bit her lip with vexation at the turn their conversation had taken.

"I am very well satisfied with my husband, thank you," she said gaily, and yet there was a note in her voice that, to him, did not ring quite true.

"Are you sure?" he gravely asked.

"Why shouldn't I be satisfied?" she cried, as she suddenly stretched out her jeweled hands before her, and glanced fondly at them, then down at her shimmering dress; "do I not have everything I want? Do you not do everything to make me happy?"

"I try to, surely; but are you really happy, Anna?"

There was the slightest possible pause before she replied. Then she burst forth impetuously!

"I never was so happy in my life!"

And she spoke only truth, for she was reveling in luxury such as she had never dreamed of in those not very remote days when she and her mother had toiled early and late at making jackets for twenty-five cents apiece.

"I do not believe you ever were," said John Hubbard, a smile of satisfaction wreathing his lips as he passed on to his own dressing-room.

CHAPTER X.

When they entered the brilliantly lighted dining-room, and sought their accustomed places, the newly arrived American was already seated at an adjoining table, quite near them.

Mrs. Hubbard shot one comprehensive glance at him as her husband directed her attention to the unobtrusive individual, then remarking, with her French shrug, that he "did not appear to be particularly interesting," she paid no further attention to him. They had planned to go that evening to the opera, to hear Nordica, as Marguerite, in "Faust," and both being exceedingly fond of music, they were anticipating a rare treat.

Anna Hubbard, on returning to her rooms, had just tied a ravishing little hat of costly lace and plumes upon her brown head with this pleasure in view, and her husband was in the act of buttoning his gloves, when there came a rap upon their door. John Hubbard opened it, to find, to his astonishment, the "newly arrived American," Mr. A. A. Nichols, standing outside.

"Have I the honor of addressing Mr. John Hubbard, of New York City?" blandly inquired the gentleman, as he removed his hat and bowed politely.

"That is my name," somewhat stiffly responded Mr. Hubbard, whose dignity was rather offended because an advance courier had not been sent to solicit an interview. Mr. Nichols immediately presented his card, with an air of deference which at once smoothed the

ONLY ONE CURE FOR A BAD STOMACH

Indigestion and Similar Troubles Must be Treated Through the Blood.

Indigestion can be treated in many ways, but it can be cured in only one way—through the blood. Purgatives cannot cure indigestion. By main force they move the food on still undigested. That weakens the whole system, uses up the natural juices of the body and leaves the stomach and bowels parched and sore. It is a cause of indigestion—not a cure. Others try pre-digested foods and peptonized drugs. But drugs which digest the food for the stomach really weaken its power. The digestive organs can never do the work properly until they are strong enough to do it for themselves. Nothing can give the stomach that power but the new, rich, red blood so abundantly supplied by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. So the reason for their success is plain. The health of the stomach depends upon the blood in its delicate veins. If that blood is weak and watery the gastric glands haven't the strength to secrete the juices which alone can digest the food. If the blood is loaded with impurities it cannot absorb the good from the food when it is digested. Nothing can stimulate the glands, and nothing can absorb the nourishment but pure, red blood. And nothing can give that pure, red blood but Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mrs. Alfred Gallant, Mill River, P. E. I. says:—"For several years, previous up to two years ago, I suffered continually from indigestion. I could not eat enough to keep my strength, and what little I did eat, no matter what kind of food, caused great pains, so that I became much reduced in flesh, strength and energy. I consulted several doctors and took medicine from them but without any benefit whatever. On the advice of a friend I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and soon good results were noticed, I could slightly increase the amount of food day after day, and suffered no inconvenience, until after taking ten boxes I could eat any kind of food and in a short time got back to my normal state of health and feel that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have surely cured me of a most stubborn case of indigestion."

You can get these Pills from any dealer in medicine or they will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CHEMISTRY 4,600 YEARS AGO.

Employed by the Chinese in Cure of Disease.

Yu Tung Kwai, a Chinese delegate to the chemistry congress, read an interesting paper before a section of the assembly on the chemical industry of China, says the London Standard. Alchemy, he said, was known in China at least 2,700 years before Christ, and China still occupied an important position in regard to the chemical industries of the world.

The principal object of the practice of alchemy 4,600 years ago, he said, was the cure of disease. Ef-netto, with brilliant, wine-brown eyes, dark brown hair and brows, good features, perfect teeth, and vividly scarlet lips.

She had acquired a fair education, having attended a high school until the death of her father, and, being quick-witted and observing, she was thus enabled to make a very good appearance under the changed conditions of her life.

When John Hubbard's proposition had opened out before her the prospect of stepping from a hovel to a palace, from homespun to velvets and diamonds, so to speak, she had grasped for it as eagerly as a drowning person would grasp at a straw, without giving a single thought to the responsibilities of such a position, or the duties which lay before her as a wife. Her one desire was to get away from the intolerable grind of her life, even though that end could only be achieved at the moral expense of aiding and abetting a crime.

Immediately after the maturing of John Hubbard's plans, and while they were awaiting the movements of the court, Mrs. Brown and her daughter had removed to a better locality, where, establishing themselves under the name of Brewster, they had comfortable rooms, plenty to eat, and good and tasteful, though not elegant, clothing to wear, Mr. Hubbard, of roads in their elegant, noiselessly rolling carriage, behind a pair of fleet-footed, coal-black horses, in gold-mounted harness, chatting socially and enjoying every moment, until they finally drove ostentatiously into the courtyard of their hotel, where obsequious servants sprang forward to open the carriage door, relieve "madame" of her wraps, and pretty trifles—trophies of her outing—and follow in her train as she entered the gorgeous vestibule and passed on to the elevator, to be taken to her apartments.

As they swept through the wide entrance, John Hubbard observed a quiet, gentlemanly appearing man, in a tourist's suit of dark gray, standing beside one of the imposing pillars. He gave him but a casual glance in passing, but that was sufficient to assure him that the stranger was one of his own countrymen.

After attending his wife to their rooms, his curiosity prompted him to go below again to the office, and glance at the hotel register. Yes, it was as he had thought, for there, among the arrivals of the afternoon he found the name of "A. A. Nichols, New York City, U. S. A."

"Humph! I wonder just who A. A. Nichols may be," he muttered thoughtfully, as he turned away from the desk and strolled into the reading-room for another look at the newcomer, if he should be so fortunate as to find him there.

He espied the stranger almost opposite him as he entered the apartment, sitting by a window, quietly reading a New York paper. Placing himself in a convenient position, where he could have a good view of the man, Mr. Hubbard drew forth the London Times from his pocket, and, using this as a screen, proceeded to watch the object of his curiosity from behind it.

But he saw nothing to interest him particularly or reward him for his trouble; for, after half an hour of apparently diligent reading, Mr. A. A. Nichols methodically folded his paper, put it carefully in his pocket; then, rising, strolled leisurely from the place, as if wholly unconscious of having been observed. Some time later, when John Hubbard was returning to his rooms, he met the American coming down the stairs.

They glanced casually at each other, and passed; then the lawyer went indifferently on, simply telling himself that "the fellow looked like a common newspaper correspondent, or, perhaps, a writer of articles for some magazine." Entering his own domains, he found Mrs. Hubbard just putting the finishing touches to a ravishing toilet, preparatory to going down to the table d'hôte.

"That's a fine gown, Anna," said the admiring husband, as he paused before her, and shot an appreciative glance over the brilliant-looking woman of whose beauty he was every day becoming more and more proud; "you do manage to get yourself up in the most stunning fashion."

"Thank you; you are getting to be quite a flatterer, Mr. Hubbard," Anna retorted, as she merrily swept him a curtsy of acknowledgment. "But where have you been all this time?" she added curiously.

"Down in the reading-room; there is a newly arrived American in the house—a Mr. A. A. Nichols."

"Ah! Where is he from?"

"New York."

"Is he young, or old?"

"About thirty-five, I should man, as he removed his hat and bowed politely.

"That is my name," somewhat stiffly responded Mr. Hubbard, whose dignity was rather offended because an advance courier had not been sent to solicit an interview. Mr. Nichols immediately presented his card, with an air of deference which at once smoothed the ruffled plumage of the newly rich man before him.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the summer months as to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentery and stomach troubles are alarmingly frequent at this time and too often a little life is lost after a few hours' illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles or if the trouble comes suddenly will bring the little one through safely.

Mrs. Geo. Howell, Sandy Beach, Que., says:—"My baby was suffering from colic, vomiting and diarrhoea, but after giving him Baby's Own Tablets the trouble disappeared." Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MITTENS FOR MIDSUMMER.

Addressing a gathering at Eastbourne in connection with the British Red Cross Society, Sir Frederick Treves remarked that at the time of the Boer War the Red Cross organization might be said to have been in a state of absolute chaos, says the London Standard. He was with the Ladysmith relief column and his wagon was the twenty-first that entered that town. When he came to unpack the Red Cross hampers, which were of all sizes and shapes, the first was found to be entirely filled with woollen mittens. The temperature at Ladysmith was from 103 to 105 degrees in the shade, and to open a box containing nothing but woollen mittens was a very deplorable thing. Moreover a number of heavy boxes packed with flannel shirts, pajamas and all sorts of things that the soldiers would have been delighted with were delivered at his house in London some months after the war was over.

"Where are you off to in such a hurry?" "To the doctor for my husband." "What's up with him?" "He tells me he has got hepatitis, dyspepsia, rheumatism, enteritis, gastritis, appendicitis, nephritis, and cerebro-spinal meningitis." "Holy terrors! Where did he get all that?" "Why, a man induced him to buy a medical dictionary, and he's just begun reading it."

A Standard Medicine—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, compounded of entirely vegetable substances known to have a revivifying and salutary effect upon the digestive organs, have through years of use attained so eminent a position that they rank as a standard medicine. The ailing should remember this. Simple in their composition, they can be assimilated by the weakest stomach and are certain to have a healthful and agreeable effect on the sluggish digestive organs.

don Standard. Alchemy, he said, was known in China at least 2,700 years before Christ, and China still occupied an important position in regard to the chemical industries of the world.

The principal object of the practice of alchemy 4,600 years ago, he said, was the cure of disease. Efforts were also made to evolve a preparation somewhat analogous to the philosopher's stone, the result attained being known as gold pills.

Metallurgical work and dyeing were known in China from time immemorial, while the processes of making gunpowder, paper, glass and porcelain all originated in the same country, while it is admitted that the Chinese of the seventh century had a clear knowledge of oxygen.

"Circumstances in China," said the lecturer, "have now changed. Since China has been known for thousands of years to be an agricultural country and to possess an enormous wealth of undeveloped minerals, attention has naturally been directed to the study of these two branches of applied science."

A Board of Agriculture and Industries has been instituted, composed of different bureaux, each bureau managing some department, such as land surveying, mine surveying, irrigation work, &c. Having its headquarters in Peking, the affairs of each province are controlled directly by provincial executive committees, and shortly, it is believed, Government experimental stations will be established. Also in the formation of chemical societies provincial societies have been formed, which will constitute sectional branches. Agricultural societies too are being formed in good numbers, and the last few years have witnessed the establishment of 'commercial guilds.'

"A characteristic feature about the teaching system of China is that chemistry, together with mathematics, is a compulsory subject in the elementary schools. This is insisted upon, not only that the pupil's mind may be trained but also that the young student may acquire some elementary knowledge of natural phenomena."

WHAT'S HIS NAME.

The auctioneer's hammer had just fallen, and the little man whose bid had been accepted smiled joyfully.

"What name, please?" asked the clerk.

And a small voice replied, "It's Me."

"Quite so," said the smart clerk; "we are aware of that. But what is 'me's' name?"

"It's Me," said the same apologetic voice.

"Oh, is it?" said the clerk, a fine scorn in his tones. "Well, even supposing you're a founding, I s'pose some sort of name was given you—Brown, Jones, or Robinson, eh?"

"No, it's Me," said the sad, weary little voice.

"You're wasting valuable time, sir," said the auctioneer, sharply. "If you won't give your name, the article must be put up again."

"Hard lines!" said the little man, with a sigh. "Just because my name isn't Jones or Robinson I lose a good, cheap table. Perhaps if I spell my name you'll like it better: M-e-e-Mee."

And the smart clerk felt small enough to crawl through the keyhole of his desk as he booked the purchase.

REDOUBTABLE OLD SHIP

NELSON'S FLAGSHIP VICTORY
IS 144 YEARS OLD.

She Had Established a Glorious Record Long Before Trafalgar Was Fought.

The Victory was 144 years old last month. The redoubtable old ship was put afloat at Chatham Dockyard on May 7, 1765, and her age at Trafalgar, therefore, was more than forty years, or double the effective life of a modern warship.

The first Victory of which any record appears in the annals of the British Navy bore the flag of Admiral Sir John Hawkins, in the conflict with the Spanish Armada. The immediate predecessor of the existent ship was a first-rate of the line of one hundred guns. During a violent tempest on Oct. 8, 1744, she was caught in the Race of Alderney and lost. There perished in her Admiral Balchen, "one hundred gentlemen's sons," and her crew of close upon a thousand hands.
This is believed to be the most disastrous shipwreck in all history.

A GLORIOUS RECORD.

Although popular idea associates the present Victory with Nelson's immortal triumph, she had established a glorious record long prior to Trafalgar. She carried the flags of Keppel and D'Orvilliers at Brest, of Howe at the relief of Gibralter, of Hood at Toulon, of Hot-ham off Hyeres, and of St. Vincent in the famous fight of 1797.

At the date of her launch she was the veritable Dreadnought of her age, her burthen being 2,164 tons.
At the present time she only carries twenty-four light guns for saluting purposes—nearly a hundred fewer than formed her armament at Trafalgar.

MUCH CHANGED.

The Victory has recently been restored more closely to the semblance of her original appearance, save that her spars remain much more dwarfed than when she sailed the seas. She was the first ship of war to carry royals and topgal-lant studding-sails. Her topsides are still in a good state of preservation, albeit showing many signs of wood-worm. Her bottom, however, consists very largely of bricks and mortar.

Probably less than one-third of the original woodwork now remains in the hull, which was severely knocked about during the French wars. It is computed that if all the trophies fashioned out of "genuine timber from the Victory" could be collected they would suffice to build at least four such ships as she.

SLEEP FOR THE SLEEPERS.

Specialist Wooses Slumber for His Wide Awake Patients.

A French specialist has come to insomnia. His method is somewhat vaguely described as "lulling the wide awakes to unconsciousness much as babies are put to slumber."

"It is a perfect palace of peace that he has opened in lovely Touraine," says the Lady's Pictorial.
"Here is never a disturbing sound.
The silence is broken only by the absolutely monotonous and soothing tick, tock, tick of solid grandfather clocks, and the scarcely perceptible drip of unseen fountains."

"Everything is seen through a cerulean haze, everybody moves in best slippers, the air is fresh but full of aint perfume. Before the eyes of very refractory patients slowly revolve colored balls, not the smallest rose leaf is allowed to crumple in any bed, each being so designed that there is no possibility of the body growing weary. Here, in fact, the wooing of sleep has been made a positive science, and it is said no one can keep awake here, however hard he may try."

UNCONQUERABLE SOULS.

The English soldier who sent his people the tunic he had worn in a battle at the beginning of the South African War, and wrote from hospital, "You will see that there are eleven bullet-holes in it, but I was awfully lucky; only six of them hit me," has a rival in an English schoolboy of ten, whose cheerful acceptance of the "bludgeonings of chance" a writer in St. James Budget has made public.

"My life has been a very lucky one," wrote the ten-year-old.
"When I was three years old I fell down-stairs and cut my head.
When I was five years old I was looking at some hens, and a dog bit my leg."

"When I was eight I went with my brother in the trap, and the horse fell and threw us out of the trap; my brother lit on his feet and I lit on the horse's back."

"Last year I was playing, and ran into a lurry and cut my eyebrow, and it has left a mark."

"One day I went into the slaughter-house, and a big sheep ran after me and knocked me down, and broke my arm."

"I have had a happy life."

WHAT WAS DONE TO GEORGE.

The head of a big firm of contractors was walking round the premises, and stopped to converse with old George, a stableman.

"Well, George, how goes it?" he said.

"Fair to middlin', sir," George

PAID IN ADVANCE.

Mrs. Rockefeller, mother of the great J. D., millionaire, was rather a strict disciplinarian, and upheld the standard of the family with a birch switch when it showed a tendency to deteriorate.

Once, when J. D. was being punished for some unfortunate doings which had taken place in the village school, he felt called upon to explain, after the whipping had begun, that he was entirely innocent of the charge preferred against him.

"Never mind," replied his mother, "we have started on this whipping, and it will do for next time."

Fiction is stranger than truth, in spite of the proverb. Here is a striking example of the contrast between "the way it is in books" and real life. In the book this is the method used:—"Outside the wind moaned unceasingly, its voice now that of a child which sobs to itself in the night, now that of a woman who suffers her great pain alone, as women have suffered since life began, as women must suffer till life wears to its weary end. And mingled with the wailing of the wind, rain fell, fell heavily, intermittently, like tears wrung from

...WHAT WAS DONE TO GEORGE.
The head of a big firm of contractors was walking round the premises, and stopped to converse with old George, a stableman.
"Well, George, how goes it?" he said.
"Fair to middlin', sir," George answered. "Fair to middlin'." And he continued to rub down a bay horse, while the other looked on in silence. "Me and this 'ere hoss," George said, suddenly, "has worked for you sixteen year."
"Well, well," said the master, thinking a little guiltily of George's very low wage. "And I suppose you are both pretty highly valued, George, eh?"
"H'm!" said George. "Both of us was took ill last week, and they got a doctor for the hoss, but they just docked my pay."

If allowed to roam over your house those few innocent-looking house flies may cause a real tragedy any day, as they are known to be the principal agents for the spread of those deadly diseases, typhoid fever, diphtheria and smallpox. No other fly killer compares with Wilson's Fly Pads.

TWO AUTO RACERS KILLED

Car Skidded Into Fence and Leaped Embankment at Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: Two men were instantly killed at Friday's meet of the Canadian Automobile Club at Blue Bonnets. C. K. Bachelder of Newport, Vt., and J. Twohey of Montreal were in a big 60-horse power Stearns' touring car, taking part in a ten-mile race, when they turned out to pass a driver named Burman, their car skidded, tore away 25 feet of fence like so much pasteboard, leaped the embankment, and stopped 40 yards beyond. The two men were thrown high into the air, and when picked up Twohey was dead, with his neck broken, while Bachelder, with his bowels torn out by a stake, and his head terribly gashed, died on his way to the hospital.

Just how the accident happened is not known. There were six cars in the race, and Mr. Bachelder had just turned into the back stretch on the eighth mile, when he turned out to pass Burman, who was immediately in front. The big cars were going at a terrific speed, and apparently Bachelder lost control for the fraction of a second, as he turned out. At any rate his car shot across the track into the fence, through it and over the embankment, carrying its driver and his assistant to their death.

After the accident it was found that the car had a broken axle, but this is thought to have occurred when the car hit the fence. Auto drivers are of the opinion that a burst tire was the cause of the trouble. It happened so quickly that no person could tell exactly how it took place.

Fashion Hints.

FADS AND FANCIES.

Brading has taken a new lease of trimming.

Purple seems to have been ruled out of court.

The Panama is to the fore among cutting hats.

The leg o' mutton sleeve looms in the horizon.

Wavy hair is an insistent demand of fashion.

The faded, washed out dyes continue to be modish.

The apron front of the late seventies is here once more.

Even the gowns of white muslin show the tunic effect.

Quills and wings have suffered no loss of popularity.

The short coat is back with walking suits and plaited skirts.

Colored linens are taking the lead this season instead of the white.

Wide embroideries and soutache insets are among much used trimmings.

The polka dots are used in stunning designs on hand embroidered lingerie.

Rubberized mohair is among the popular materials for sensible raincoats.

Black willow plumes on a hat of white straw make a striking combination.

Hatpin cases, similar to those for stickpins, are among the leather novelties of the season.

This is the season of transparent muslin frocks. Never before have they been so popular.

Fancy bags for holding one's work are made of Irish crochet. They are lined with colors.

There are wonderful combinations of color this season, in which the dull, dead shades chiefly prevail.

The fad for black gowns, or those trimmed heavily with jet, has increased the demand for black gloves.

Envelope handbags of patent leather with stiff handles, gilt clasps, and gilt letters on the outside are the fashionable handbags of the hour.

Handbags of raffia with fringed ends and mounted in silver or gilt have handles of the same material. They are admirable with pongee and linen frocks.

Wash ribbons used in lingerie are wider than heretofore. The ribbon used in the top of the adjustable petticoat flounce is frequently an inch or so in width.

Some umbrellas and parasols are now made so that they may be folded up and carried with ease in an ordinary suitcase. They are extremely simple in mechanism.

When making sleeves that have a little fullness at the elbow, sew from the shoulder toward the elbow and then from the wrist toward the elbow, adjusting the fullness last.

One of the innovations of the summer is the big circular cape, made of the same material as the princess gown with which it is worn. Some of them have military collars.

The walking skirt has not yet taken to itself draperies, but it has the cuirass or hip yoke with the plaited lower part of the skirt, so that even the walking skirt is not plain.

The new silk gloves have buttons on the sides instead of the middle. These come in all colors, and the long ones are tucked. This gives the appearance of the mousquetaire sleeve.

Physician Declares Atrophine is Remedy for Disease.

A despatch from New York says. After a series of experiments in the clinics of Mount Sinai Hospital in this city carried on for the last two years and a half by Dr. J. HEALTH

FOOD FOR THE FAT.

It is possible that the actual proportion of overfat people in the general population is no greater now than it ever was, but to the observer who has lived many years it seems as if the number of persons one meets who are noticeably overweight had increased greatly in recent years.

Some large folk are content with their lot—nearly all are jolly, yet there are many who would give much for every pound they could throw off.

There are a number of dietary systems in vogue for reducing weight, almost all efficacious, if strictly followed, but not all safe. The original "banting system," for example, in which the person is restricted to little more than a lean-meat diet, is not to be recommended, and one who practises it, unless under constant medical supervision, may do himself irreparable harm. No one system, indeed, is applicable to all cases, for the cause is not always the same, and what may be suitable for one fat person may not be at all what another needs.

It is popularly believed that all fat persons are gross feeders, but this is not true; indeed, the reverse is often the case. Obesity may be a disease, or rather a prominent symptom of one, the trouble being with the internal chemistry of nutrition—a disease of metabolism, as it is called. It is comparable to diabetes—nearly related to it, in fact. In this disease sugar is formed in excess in the system, even when very little is taken with the food; and so in obesity there is a tendency to the formation of fat in the body, even if little fat-forming food is eaten. In most cases, however, much can be done by a regulation of the diet.

The amount of meat should not be increased, but the quantity of sugar and starchy foods should be reduced, their place being taken by non-starchy vegetables, such as spinach, cauliflower and salads. The foods to be avoided, or taken in great moderation, are those which contain much starch, such as rice and potatoes, and all sweets—pies, puddings and candy. Tea and coffee should be taken without sugar, if taken at all, and chocolate should be omitted entirely.

Bread is fattening, but for most persons it seems an indispensable article of diet. Its amount can, however, be limited, and it should be toasted.

Fats are less harmful than sugar and starch, and may be allowed in moderation in the form of butter and salad oil.

The belief that the drinking of water makes fat is erroneous. If one eats juicy vegetables, and especially the less sweet fruits, such as apples and grape-fruit, and abandons the use of sugar, there will be a natural reduction in the amount of water taken, but one should drink all that is needed to quench thirst.—Youth's Companion.

HOW WOMEN MAY KEEP WELL

An authority upon all matters connected with physical training

There are wonderful combinations of color this season; in which the dull, dead shades chiefly prevail.

The fad for black gowns, or those trimmed heavily with jet, has increased the demand for black gloves.

Lace insertion on a lingerie waist may be easily repaired by sewing under it a piece of fine net or tulle.

The separate black coat of voile, Panama, or other lightweight material, is worn with light wash dresses.

The sixteenth century scarf which was attached to each shoulder and then swung loose is a trifle out of fashion.

An odd feature of the newest large hats is that the smartest are almost absolutely flat, large, and floppy.

Jabots still continue popular. They are made of lace, Irish crochet, or sheer white material with lace insets.

Some of the newest imported princess gowns are made with the bodice and hip yoke elaborately embroidered.

The newest piece of neckwear sent out from the French shops is a scalloped Dutch collar attached to a high bone stock to match.

The sleeve that fastens straight down the back from shoulder to wrist remains in style, but it has been considerably widened at the elbow.

Gray and combinations of black

the clinics of Mount Sinai Hospital in this city carried on for the last two years and a half by Dr. J. Rudisch of the visiting staff, it has just made a preliminary report on the use of atropine in diabetes. He considers it a cure for that widespread disease which is attacking more and more New Yorkers every year in these "strenuous life" days. Atropine is the active principle of belladonna or "deadly nightshade." It has never before been tried in kidney troubles, though it was well known that it was chiefly eliminated by the kidneys and therefore exerted a pronounced effect on those organs.

CATTLE DYING IN HUNDREDS.

Serious Epidemic Causes Great Loss in Louisiana.

A despatch from Lake Charles, Louisiana, says: Advice received here on Wednesday from Cameron Parish indicate that the epidemic of charbon, which has prevailed in that section for several weeks, is spreading widely among cattle and other live stock. Hundreds of range cattle have died of charbon and their carcasses lie unburied in the marshes. It has been proposed to adjourn the present session of court at the parish seat of Cameron in order that every one may take a hand in suppressing the epidemic.

GIVES HIS WHOLE FORTUNE

An Aged Chicago Millionaire Soon to Be a Poor Man.

A despatch from Chicago says: Daniel K. Pearsons, the "sage of Hinsdale," already famous for his munificent benefactions to the small colleges of this country, announced that he would devote the remainder of his ninetieth year to distributing among the various educational and philanthropic institutions of this city his last million dollars. This will round out the sum that he had always intended Chicago to have, and leave him relatively a poor man when he celebrates his 90th birthday on the 20th of next April.

Mr. Pearsons declined on Wednesday night to indicate what institutions will benefit by the remainder of his large fortune.

For virtually a quarter of a century, Mr. Pearsons has devoted the major portion of his attention to bestowing his money on public institutions which he deemed worthy, and he has already given away considerably over $4,000,000. His gift to Chicago will mark his retirement from the role of philanthropist, for he will have only enough to insure himself a comfortable old age.

A DRUNKARD'S WIFE WINS

She Is Awarded Heavy Damages Against a Detroit Saloonkeeper.

A despatch from Detroit says: A decision far-reaching in its importance, and one which will be of interest to the cause of temperance everywhere, was handed down by the Michigan Supreme Court on Wednesday. Mrs. Nettie Marri-man of Grass Lake brought suit against Frederick, a saloonkeeper in the same town, claiming $10,000 damages from him for having sold liquor to her husband, as well as causing the plaintiff to lose her home, her money, and the companionship of her husband. It was shown to the satisfaction of the court that until Marri-man took to drink he was a prosperous railroad telegrapher, and stood high with his employers. The drink habit caused him to lose everything, and finally his wife was obliged to leave him. The case went before a jury, which gave Mrs. Marri-man a small verdict, but she appealed to the Supreme Court and the decision on Wednesday resulted in a verdict against the saloonkeeper for $5,225.

LIVE STOCK MARKETS.

Montreal, July 13.—There was only one load of really prime beeves on the market and they sold at 6 to 6½c per pound. There were several loads of North-West ranch cattle, which sold at 4½c to a little over 5c per pound; common stock, 2½ to 4c per pound. There was an over supply of milch cows, causing a further decline in prices, which ranged from $20 to $30 each. Calves $2.50 to $10 each, or 3½ to 6c per pound. Sheep, 3½ to 3¾c per pound; lambs at $3.50 to $5.50 each. Hogs, about 8½c per pound.

Toronto, July 13.—Business was quiet, and prices somewhat easier in consequence of the heavy buying earlier in the week, also that very few choice butchers or exporters were on offer. Prime butcher cattle were wanted, but there were very few offering, therefore prices for this class were steady, but all other grades declined and it looks as though the break in prices had started. Sheep and lambs were steady. Hogs weak and unchanged. Calves weak and unchanged.

It was his custom to drive about the country with a banner at the end of a pole, proclaiming his mission.

HOW WOMEN MAY KEEP WELL

An authority upon all matters connected with physical training says that a woman who wishes to keep well and in good condition should sleep nine hours of the twenty-four, take cold water baths, exercise for five minutes each day with light dumbbells, drink a cup of hot liquid before breakfast, spend half an hour every day in outdoor exercise, make the best of bad bargains and, above all, always keep her temper.—London Globe.

ARSENIC IN THE DRUGS.

Result of Inland Revenue Examination of Samples.

A despatch from Ottawa says: The examination by the inland revenue department of a number of drugs, as found on the Canadian market, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any of these contained distinct traces of arsenic, shows that while most samples were practically free from the poison, arsenic was found to be distinctly present in certain sulphates and particularly in phosphate of soda. The amounts were not so large as to be alarming, but were sufficient to make it impossible to regard those drugs as meeting proper requirements; 448 samples of sulphate of magnesia, sulphate of soda and phosphate of soda examined showed 336 containing no arsenic, while 86 did.

A TRAINING FARM.

Plan to Assist Emigrants to Become Farmers.

A despatch from Ottawa says: A scheme is under way to establish a training farm in connection with the Ottawa Union Reserve Mission. It is intended to establish a farm in the vicinity of the capital where applicants for help from the mission can be temporarily looked after and given productive employment in farm work that will be of service in equipping them for an agricultural life in the west or on Ontario farms. Many of those who seek shelter at the mission are newly arrived immigrants who are looking for work on farms, but whose lack of experience in farm life is a handicap in securing employment.

$10,000 PRIZE LIST.

Provincial Winter Fair Board Holds Meeting at Guelph.

A despatch from Guelph says: The Ontario Provincial Winter Fair Board held a meeting here on Wednesday and decided that the prize list this year should total $10,000. The Horse Show prize list will be along the same lines as that of last year's Horse Show, held at the stock yards in Toronto. The amount for horse prizes is about $3,000. The feature of the poultry prize list this year will be the department of 20 classes or more in pigeons, to include the birds of 1903 which have been excluded heretofore. Realizing that the showing of fat stock has been in the past the only weakness of the show, the board have greatly increased the prizes for that class.

YOUNG FOLKS

LITTLE WATCHMEN.

Bebe is sure that grandmother's garden is the loveliest garden a boy ever played in. On one side a white picket fence shuts off the garden from the street. In the center is a star-shaped flower-bed, and all the other beds fit in a pattern round this one, separated from it by narrow paths. When Bebe visits grandmother in the summer, he finds the garden a pleasant playground and the flowers delightful playmates.

"Mother," said Bebe one day, "I should like to play in the garden this afternoon."

"Bebe," said mother, "you may play in the garden this afternoon, but do not play too long, for we are going to Aunt Myra's to tea."

"I like to go to Aunt Myra's to tea," said Bebe, "for there is always a little round cake for me to bring home, because I can't eat it at night. How shall I know how long too long is?"

"When the little white blossoms in the bed shaped like a crescent moon open it will be time to come in," said mother.

"I know the moon-shaped bed," said Bebe, "but the little blossoms in it are only buds. I saw them yesterday morning and I saw them this morning all shut tight."

"This afternoon," said mother, "you will see them all open."

Bebe went into the garden to play. First he went to the bed of the sleepy flowers.

"You think because you live in the moon it is always night! Wake up!" said Bebe; but not a flower stirred.

Bebe pushed his way among the flowers that bent half-way over the walks, chatting with their neighbors. He called on the foxglove, coxcomb, lady's-delight, larkspur, bouncing-bet, sweet-william and baby's-breath, and then he looked again at the blossoms which were to tell him when to get ready for tea.

"Oh!" said Bebe. "Good afternoon!" for one little flower peered at him from a sleepy, half-open eye.

"Have you had a pleasant nap, sleepy-head?" asked Bebe of another flower, which was beginning to stretch its petals. Then, as he watched, he saw the blossoms slowly, slowly open, one after another, and he knew it was time to go into the house to get ready for tea at Aunt Myra's, where there is always a little round cake for a boy to take home.

"Why did they sleep so long and wake so late, mother?" asked Bebe.

"All last night they watched in the garden until the morning-glories came on duty bright and early in the morning," said mother. "All day to-day they slept, until four o'clock this afternoon. Because they always wake at four o'clock they are called four-o'clock's, and they are the little night-watchmen of the garden."—Youth's Companion.

A despatch from Toronto says:

RICH MINES OF ONTARIO

The Output for the Province in 1908 Was $26,000,000.

Silver and nickle are Ontario's chief minerals according to the annual report of Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, just issued. The silver output last year was 19,401,021 ounces and was practically all from the Cobalt camp. The nickel production totalled 10,175 tons and chiefly came from the Sudbury district. Despite the low prices last year the silver shipments reached the value of $9,116,008.

The ores and minerals produced in Ontario last year were valued at $26,616,795, as compared with $25,019,373 for the previous year. The production of nickel in 1908 was valued at $1,071,140. The iron mines of Ontario yielded 216,177 tons of ore last year, worth $574,839, and there was made at the blast furnaces 271,656 tons of pig iron, valued at $4,390,839.

"Ontario now occupies a leading place among the silver-producing countries of the world," says the Minister, "having contributed about one-ninth of the entire reported production in 1908. There was raised and shipped from the mines of Cobalt last year 24,453 tons of ore (including concentrates), which was considerably more than the total production up to the end of 1907. The average contents of the shipments for 1908 were 793 ounces of silver per ton, compared with 806 ounces up to 31st December, 1907."

The revenue from the timber dues was $1,618,242.58, the largest in the history of the province. Arrears of $496,000 accruing from 1907 are included in this as collections were not enforced owing to the financial stringency that year. The net collections for 1908 were $1,224,243 and the sum of $235,368 was carried forward into 1909 owing to the inability of the lumbermen to pay.

FAKE ACCIDENT CLAIMS.

Three Men Arrested on Charge of Conspiracy.

A despatch from Montreal says: Three men named Nathan Aloof, Max Catsoff, and Appi Shyropsky were arrested on Wednesday on a charge of conspiracy to defraud. The detectives, who have worked to that end for months, declare they have rounded up the cleverest trio of "fake accident claim" workers who ever figured in Montreal's criminal annals. No less than a score of accident claims have been put through by the men, and in every case the amount of damages was large. According to the detectives, the men have taken turns in the role of "injured through negligence," and the other two acted as witnesses. The complainants in this case are the C. P. R., the Montreal Street Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway. The men denied their guilt, but were remanded.

The proprietor was alone, and accompanied the visitor to the yard, where some time was spent in examining the conditions. Later in the day Mr. Collins found that $500 had been taken from the safe during his absence in the yard.

The Nurse Girl Found It an Easy Matter.

The benevolent old gentleman stopped at the sight of the two similar-looking infants in the baby-carriage, and said in a pleasant voice to the girl in attendance:—

"Ah! Twins?"
"Yes, sir," replied the girl; "both boys."
"So!" said the old gentleman. "How do you tell them apart? Which is which?"

"This one," said the nurse, pointing, "is this, and that one is that."

"Dear me!" said the old gentleman, "how very interesting. But," he added, indicating the second one, "might not this one be this also?"

"It might," said the girl, after a short pause. "Then, of course, that one would be that."

"Well, then," said the old gentleman, "how do you manage to separate them?"

"We seldom do, but when we want to we put one in one room and the other in another."

"How do you know which one you're putting in which room?"

"We look and see which is in the other room, and then we know the other is in the which room."

"Very good," said the old gentleman, warming up to the problem, "but if one of them was in the house and the other was away somewhere, would you be able to tell which was in the house?"

"Oh, yes, sir," said the girl, earnestly; "all we would have to do would be to look at him and then we would know that the one we saw was the the one in the house, and then, of course, the one away somewhere would be the other. There are only two of them, you see, which makes it very easy."

The benevolent old gentleman then passed on.

SHOT WIFE THEN SUICIDED

The Terrible Crime of George England of Niagara Falls, N. Y.

A despatch from Niagara Falls, N.Y., says: George England, a member of a respected family of this city, and a Michigan Central freight conductor, 24 years old, shot and killed his wife, Gertrude, 30 years old, at their home, Niagara Falls, N.Y., some time during Wednesday night. He then turned the weapon, a 32-calibre revolver, upon himself, with fatal results. The crime was not discovered until Thursday morning, when F. M. Campbell, a milk dealer, went to deliver the morning's milk. Campbell found the side door forced from the lock. He surmised there was something amiss, and pushed in the door. On the table there was a pail ready to receive the milk, as usual, but when the milkman looked behind the door he saw England's body stretched on its back. Blood was oozing from the right temple, and a revolver lay near the man's left hand. In another room the dead body of the woman was found, and a tiny infant, which the pair had adopted, utterly oblivious of what had happened, was crying and fretting because of inattention.

It is not known what was the cause of the terrible affair, although there are reports of domestic infelicity that may have led up to the tragedy.

THE MEDICAL HALL

FRED L. HOOPER.

James Russell, a well known Napanee, passed away at the home of his son, Lake Thomas, Alberta, on July 3rd, aged seventy-six years. Mr. Russell was born in this county but spent most of his boyhood days in Scotland. He was for a number of years employed as a cheese buyer by Mr. Robt. Thompson and was well known by all the cheese men in this district. A few years ago he went out to visit his sons and made his home there. News of his illness reached Napanee some days ago and his death was not unexpected. Deceased leaves six sons to mourn the loss of a loving father. They are Roland J., farmer at Lake St. Thomas, with whom he spent his last days, Reginald, C. P. R. conductor, of Calgary; John, conductor, N. Y. C. Ry.; William, commercial traveller, New York; Robert, C. P. R. office, Toronto, and James G., architect, for Stratford.

The Lennox and Addington, the Home Fire Insurance Company.

On June 13th my barn was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. I gave notice to the Company's Head Office, at Napanee. My claim was adjusted, and on July 3rd, at a meeting of the Board of Directors, just 21 days from the date of the fire, they, through their secretary-treasurer, handed me my cheque for $347.57 in full satisfaction of my claim. I found the Board honorable and fair, both to me and the company, and can unreservedly recommend the Home Company to the farmers of these counties. The Directors are all farmers, men of our own class, and heavy Policy Holders. In case of loss which necessitates business with the company, you can personally present your case, which privilege I hold as of valued significance.

Bishop's Visit.

On Saturday, July 3rd, the Church of St. Mary Magdalene was honored by a visit from the Lord Bishop of Ontario. His Lordship was accompanied by Rev. Canon Starr, Domestic Chaplain, bearing the handsome Pastoral Staff recently presented by the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese. The Bishop preached a most forceful and eloquent sermon, which was listened to with rapt attention by the large congregation assembled. He then administered the Apostolic Rite of Holy Confirmation or the Laying on of Hands of which we read in Acts VIII and XIX and in Hebrews VI, to a class of thirty-three persons, presented by the Vicar. At this service Mr. Dudley L. Hill was set apart as a Lay Reader. Rev. Messrs. O'Connor-Fenton, Creegan, Spencer and McGreer also took part in these services. The next day Mr. F. F. Miller took His Lordship with Canon Starr and Rural Dean Dibb in his motor car to Camden East and Newburgh for similar services there.

National Missionary Campaign.

The Canadian Council of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which has the direction of the work throughout the Dominion, has just issued a statement as to its Policy and plans for the immediate future. The Policy was adopted and then submitted to the different denominational Committees and heartily endorsed by them. The Denominational Secretaries each agreed that the best results come to their work through the larger inter-denominational meetings, and will therefore all co-operate in the campaign of the fall and winter. This will include district meetings covering two days each, in every Province of the Dominion, so located that every church may be able to send one or more delegates without great outlay of time or money. It is expected that invitations will be received from different centres, and the Council will make selections with the best interests of the entire work in mind. The first few meetings will probably be held in Ontario in September, and those in the western Provinces in October and November. An earnest call to prayer for wisdom in locating and planning these meetings has been issued to co-operating clergy and laymen throughout the Dominion.
